DRAPERY HARDWARE

The wallpaper pattern illustrated is #777191.

Dream a little . . . Scheme a little!

An attractive bedroom doesn't just happen. It must be cleverly conceived, calmly contemplated . . . then carefully contrived. Such a bedroom you see. And it could so easily become your own . . . a warm, personal, colorful and truly practical room . . . planned with the best of go-togethers by decorators of three famous names in home furnishings . . . the wallpaper, Imperial, of course . . . the furniture, Cushman Colonial Creations . . . inlaid linoleum, a new design by Gold Seal floors

Cushman's New Bennington Group blends the charm of Colonial with today's fresher, freer concepts of cabinetcraft. Brushed pewter hardware, interesting louvers, off-the-floor styling, and beautifully toned highlight finish, all contribute to a sense of appropriateness here . . . as they would to special graciousness in a more traditional setting. For free literature, write H. T. Cushman Mfg. Co., Box 563, North Bennington, Vt.

The clever decorating tricks Imperial Wallpapers can perform are unlimited—here's just one. Look at the airy lightness—the illusion of added depth and space that Imperial's "Shadow Screen" pattern brings to this bedroom! And it's so easy-to-clean, too, because Imperial's "plastic bonded" process "locks in" colors. Your Imperial dealer has a host of new patterns—see them today. All backed by a unique 3 year guarantee!

Gold Seal "Starway" Inlaid Linoleum is the floor you've always dreamed of! It's gay, casual—airy and colorful as all outdoors. And so easy to care for! Its satin-smooth surface seals out dirt, resists stains. The wipe of a damp cloth whisks away grime, grease and spills. Colors are inlaid—so Starway* really wears! See it in six patterns at your Gold Seal Dealer.

so new! so beautiful! inlaid china by WEDGWOOD

The word is out and it's wonderful news! We're talking about Wedgwood's stunning new inlaid rims. What are inlaid rims? By a process that is entirely new and exclusive with Wedgwood, table-gracing colors are actually inlaid into the body of this fine English bone china beneath a glaze that insures absolute color protection . . . never to be marred or scratched . . . never varying from one exquisite piece to the next. But words alone cannot describe this most handsome of all dinnerware . . . this wonderful combination of beauty and practicality that will provide years of delightful dining . . . you have to see it to believe it!

This pegged oak floor is smart...decorative...inexpensive

There's warm informality about Bruce Ranch Plank that gives any room unusual charm. The random oak strips with walnut pegs are rich in tradition...yet their style flatters the most modern interior.

Bruce Ranch Plank is not expensive, although it has the appeal of a costly random-width floor. There's no messy, expensive sanding and finishing after the floor is laid because the walnut pegs and the beautiful Decorator Finish are factory-applied. This superb finish makes floor care the easiest you've ever known.

When you build, remodel or buy a home, be sure to tell your architect, lumber dealer or builder that you want Bruce Hardwood Floors. You can choose from the four distinctive types illustrated below. Write for free booklet with room photos in color.

A clock to match your decorating scheme

Now you can custom-make your own clock, using packaged, ready-to-assemble parts and covering the case to suit your fancy

The clock you assemble yourself comes as a complete set of essentials, even including adhesive and brush for covering the clock with fabric or paper. Base is metal, with necessary holes stamped out. It's called Herschede Tailored Time Kit.

First, cover the half-round metal base with fabric or paper, using the adhesive supplied. Covering of clock face should preferably be solid or not-too-busy pattern, which won't confuse the eye.

Fabric, stretched taut and neat across the clock face, is turned over and glued to the under-rim of the clock. Trick to keep it smooth around the edges is to pinch the material into tiny pleats.

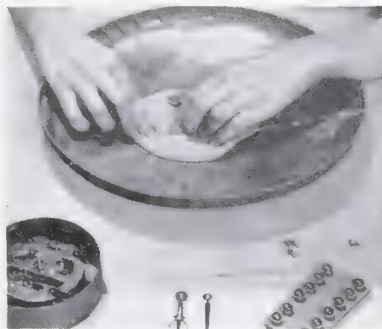

With a razor blade, slice off excess fabric or paper. Clock measures 14 inches in diameter and arcs out two inches from the wall when hung. It has a manual-winding or electric mechanism.

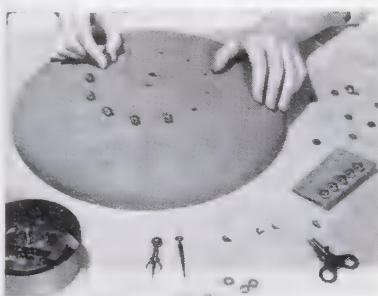

With a stylus or sharp point of a scissors, puncture the cloth or paper covering at the points where the hands, winding aperture and twelve numeral indicators occur on the clock face. Note how smoothly the cloth is drawn.

A disc of shock-absorbing foam rubber, supplied in the kit, is next fitted over and around the four little brackets which are part of the metal clock case. These brackets will eventually hold the works on the back of the clock.

Turning the clock over to its convex side, or face, you screw twelve little round brass bullets into the holes which represent the usual numerals. You see why pattern of the covering must not be so busy that the bullets get "lost."

Each one of the tiny brass indicator knobs is now secured on the back of the clock by a little bolt insuring the firm placement of each bullet. All clock hardware is included in this kit, along with the works and its round casing.

The all-important workings of the clock come compactly assembled in one unit and carefully wrapped. These are attached by screws to the four tongue brackets on the back of the clock. The rubber padding here eases vibration.

Over the works goes a protective round metal casing which is attached to the frame by screws locking the case to the same metal brackets that support the works. Electric clock kit costs about $20; the key-wound about $23.

A CLOCK TO MATCH YOUR DECORATING SCHEME

A brass grommet is included in the kit to give a neat trim to the opening for key-winding. After you've observed the movement of the clock, you can regulate its speed by moving the fast-slow device which is part of its works.

The final essential is the addition of the pretty, lacy brass hands. These are simply applied and anchored in place by a perfectly fitting little screw. The clock kit we're describing may be seen at the Clock Center, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DECORATOR'S DIARY

Checkmarks and comments on what's new and especially noteworthy in the decorating market as revealed in the pages of a decorator's "field book"

The Coultons' guest-study problem put me off on a fascinating prowling through the market for a frame sofa that can turn into a bed without ever letting you suspect its hidden talent. There are plenty of highly attractive convertible sofas in the market, but they usually operate by such marvelously contrived mechanisms that their workings have to be concealed by a full covering of upholstery, and any exposed wood you see on them is likely to be just added decoration. But Mrs. Coulton stipulated the light, airy, "settee" look of a wood frame with open arms and legs raised high from the floor. She was right, too, for she has a good eye for scale and balance and realized that the small room could well be overpowered if we added an all-over upholstered sofa to the two upholstered lounge chairs. Besides these, the other furnishings all tend to have a quality of lightness—a lamp desk, a small-scale desk chair with open fretwork back and arms, and a little bachelor chest to do double duty as a storage place for a guest's belongings and as a lamp table between the lounge chairs. Walls are celadon green, and a group of six slender Japanese print scrolls—again, rather delicate in scale—are destined to hang above the sofa.

Well, it was almost too good to be true, but I walked right into a just-right frame sofa-bed at the Jens Risom showroom. Its frame, light and airy as you please, with sculptured open arms and splatted back, is walnut with a rich, dull sheen which is created by Risom's famous rubbed linseed oil finish.

Its upholstery is a fixed button-dotted backrest of foam rubber and a reversible foam rubber mattress which rests on Danish flat springs. Normally, when in use as a sofa its seat is a comfortable 23 inches deep with a gentle backward slope. But all you have to do to turn the seat into a 36"-wide flat bed is to grasp the wooden seat base and pull. The seat slides forward as smoothly and easily as a lipstick pulls out of its case. Over-all dimensions of the sofa, which we might also have had with a birch frame, are 80" long, 36" deep and 30" high.

SCENIC WALLPAPER...18 centuries old!

The subtle design of this exquisite sectional scenic was taken directly from the original rubbings of an ancient tablet, carved during the Han or Wey Dynasty, on the walls of a cave in the Shantung Province of China. Enough of the fascinating details of a lavish banquet scene had survived the ravages of time to make a wall decoration of great historic interest as well as rare decorative beauty.

Title of this episode is "How we blitzed the view from a brownstone rear window." But its moral might apply to any window that needs more than a curtain to obliterate an unappealing vista without blocking the light. Our scene was the Gateleys' "parlor-floor" apartment in Greenwich Village. Problem was the bedroom windows—high, mighty, and fortuitously equipped with old-fashioned shutters that fold back against the wall. The windows face south and easterly, just easterly enough so that Old Sol used to start blazing down on the sleeping Gateleys hours before they wanted to rise and shine themselves. The windows also face the sooty back of a building.

"What shall we do?" cried Mrs. Gateley. With these gargantuan windows we can't possibly avoid seeing that eyesore, but we can't keep the shutters closed day and night, and the usual plain roller shades would look so blank."

Jack Lenor Larsen's showroom came up with the answer—a 50-inch wide white shade-cloth fabric screen-printed in a smart white geometric print. Call it interlocking diamonds or abbreviated triangles or prisms, but in any case, when the light filters translucently through the nylon cloth, the print is faintly outlined in a shadowy silhouette. We quickly seized upon this and whisked it off to the roller shade man who claims it couldn't be simpler to work with. The fabric has its own natural stiffness because it's such a tight weave of nylon yarns. Warp yarns—the up-and-down—are technically known as "bright" nylon, the kind that resists sun rot. And Mrs. Gateley was glad to learn that the fabric is easily kept dust free by vacuuming and can be dip-washed.

With the shades drawn during the day, the room is pleasantly lighted with nary a view of the milk bottles. And we're all delighted because the windows look completely and decoratively dressed without needing overdraperies or curtains which would have been just too much in conjunction with the tall shutter blinds. It would also be a nice, simple, easy-to-maintain solution on smaller windows, too, or where there isn't space enough on either side of a window for an effective curtain treatment.

Discovered that the cloth also comes screen-printed in several combinations of colors, using from four to seven compatible colors in each pattern, so the prisms seem almost jewel-like. Have my eye on a yellowish-greenish-bluish mixture which looks rather like stained glass when the light sifts through.

Dropped over to look at the new Moroccan hand-loomed wool upholstery cloths at Mauretania Fabrics and killed three birds with one stone. Found a wonderful off-white basket-weave wool for the Dennisons' living-room sofa; picked out an extraordinary antique Moroccan rug, curiously patterned in black on shades of henna and gold, which sings out handsomely against their travertine fireplace and the blond leather chairs that flank it.

And then, just as I was leaving, my eye lit upon the very thing we needed to complete the mantelpiece treatment in this blond-tone room. On the travertine shelf the Dennisons have been judiciously placing a choice collection of black objects of art or handcraft which they've brought back from their travels, creating a dramatic black pattern of diversified shapes against the straw-colored chimney wall. There's a panel of black wrought-iron grill-work from Spain, a carved strip of bog oak from Ireland, an Etruscan bucchero-ware urn, a spherical black pottery bowl from Oaxaca and a black goblet of Dead Sea clay.

My discovery was, of all things, an iron bison, 10" high and 15"

"Early Century"

Makes Dreams Come True!

Picture this lovely SOLID hard maple group by Kling in your own bedroom. The distinctive "Ogee" feet, massive "cannon ball" bed posts, and solid brass pulls are authentic 18th century styling.

A new finish—Cork Tan—gives the effect of aged wood rubbed with oil. It's different—it's colorful—it's beautiful.

Only in solid wood will you find details like the cut-in design in the center drawer fronts of the Triple Dresser and Chest or Chest of the EARLY CENTURY Group. "Solid" on Kling furniture is like "sterling" on silver. Each is a mark of quality. See EARLY CENTURY soon at your favorite store.

long from the tip of his horns to the tip of his tail, and a perfect shape to add variety to the collection. He was hand-hammered, hand-formed and hand-riveted in a remote village in the Atlas Mountains of Morocco. And the native craftsman who made him has given him the naïve, honest design of a cave drawing, which might well have been the artist's inspiration, for there are no real live bison in Morocco for him to copy, according to Mrs. Pinter, who imports all these intriguing things.

On one of her field trips tracking down weavers of fabrics and makers of rugs, she found this unself-conscious artist happily beating bison and an occasional horse out of the local black iron, presumably for the sheer joy of creating them. He makes them now for her—horses, too—in limited quantities, because it takes a week or so to make one. Since these iron sculptures are primitive works of art, no two are completely identical. And perhaps the most impressive aspect of them is the strangely timeless grace that makes them seem to belong with many objects and designs of all eras.

Mrs. Ian Powell-Kent has always seemed so like her late, unlamented mother-in-law in so many ways that I was astounded when she banished the heirloom Chippendale furniture and oriental rugs from her new house in Oyster Bay. "All my married life," she confided, "I've been making obeisances to Mother Powell-Kent's precious carved mahogany and masterpiece rugs. And now that they're mine, I'm turning the whole lot over to the museum and starting from scratch." Music to my ears, naturally, for I'd been expecting a fine fancy tussle trying to fit fifteen rooms full of Persian rugs into a five-room modern house.

There is nothing impulsive, however, about this lady. She haunts the showrooms with me, scrutinizing finishes and hardware and fabric construction like a resident buyer, and could teach me a thing or two about standards of quality. In fact, she is the rare client who really knows what she wants. "Fruitwood—I've always loved it—for the living room. television paraphernalia along one wall. I see the wall in a bitter brassy green and I'm hanging on to the two Venetian glass sconces because they'll be perfect at each side of that painting that looks like a Velásquez.

"We'll do the upholstery in a range of pale gold to green-gold in a variety of silks, and we'll get pattern and a little glitter into the room with that handsome rug we saw at Edward Fields—the one they call 'Brocado.'"

So we've ordered up "Brocado," a deep-pile, all-wool beauty, one of Fields' new patterns reminiscent of South American design. Eighteenth-century Spanish-Colonial embroideries suggested its stylized medallions and restrained scrolls. It's an all-over pattern, but if you look closely you realize that the motifs are grouped in squared-off blocks. It's colored in shades of gold on gold, with a flicker of metallic gold running through it. Like all Fields' rugs, it's a custom-order job, made to whatever measure and color and pile depth a client has in mind. As an ultimate point of perfection, the scale of the pattern can be made larger or smaller, in proportion to the size of the rug, whether it's room-size or for a small area.

"Brocado" rug

A room in one basic color—a monochromatic scheme—is a great way to create the illusion of space, and it's wonderfully restful to the eye and spirit, once it's done. But the search for the variety of textures and patterns it needs is murder. So when Mrs. Merton sweetly said she'd like her living room in brown, I repaired immediately to the chiropodist, for I was sure I'd be marching in and out of showrooms for a couple of months.

Brown! It sounds so simple, but when you consider how many different and frequently incompatible browns there are—cinnamon brown, sable brown, cocoa brown, chocolate brown, and forever after—you're really faced with a project.

Decided to put off a decision on the wall color and the rug until we found the four harmonious yet subtly varied fabrics we needed for sofa, chairs and draperies. And, believe it or not, one day later, we had picked the wall color and were shopping the rug market.

On the very first go-round of the fabric search, I found precisely what I needed at the L. Anton Maix showroom. I not only found the four crucial fabrics but found them already assembled for me in a new collection of correlated fabrics that Larry Maix has developed to save the footwork and compromise which usually go with color matching.

The correlations are based on eleven different color families and worked up in four different but congenial fabric weaves which are identical color matches in each color group. The base color we chose is a rather grayed brown. Our drapery choice is the fairly wide basket-weave of brown bouclé and silky gray yarns, interspersed with a faint flicker of gold Lurex. The weave produces a fairly strong, rather chequered pattern, just what is needed for variety in a one-color scheme.

The sofa upholstery is a horizontally striped chenille in tones of brown and gray; the armchairs will be covered in the trim, tailored-looking checked rep, again in brown and gray, pinpointed with a fine black warp thread. And for the occasional chairs we'll use the her own lover. The emotions of each participant are expressed in the tremendous trio.

In the third act Norma, crazed by hurt pride and jealousy, plots the killing of her lover and her children. She advances with her uplifted dagger toward the sleeping children. But the sight of the two little children overcomes her. She cannot commit the deed. Instead, she summons Adalgisa, urges her to flee with Pollione and seek her happiness, and begs her to take care of her children when she. Norma, will have found the death of atonement that she seeks. Adalgisa entreats Norma not to sacrifice herself, and the two women unite their voices in a wonderful and heart-rending duet, one of the great duets of all opera. "Mira a Norma!"

IN THE final act, Norma convenes the people. She now proclaims war and pronounces destruction on the Romans. Her cry is taken up by the soldiers. "Guerra, guerra!" (War, war!) they shout in a great chorus. Pollione is seized; death or immediate departure but without Adalgisa is his choice. Norma, still loving him, pleads for him. Pollione rejects her mercy, saying that he will not give up Adalgisa. Without hope of love and in the fullness of tragic despair, Norma confesses her guilt to the assembled people and asks for death on the funeral pyre. Pollione, overwhelmed by her devotion and penitent, now declares himself ready to die with her. Norma's head is covered with a black veil. She extends her hand to her lover, and hand in hand they walk toward the atoning flame.

Though this is hardly a masterpiece of a play, it serves as the framework around which are hung some of the richest melodies ever to be heard on the stage, melodies spun from pure velvet, heavy with age, lambent with smoothness. From the moment the curtain rises Norma is a feast. If that feast is prepared by good singers the opera is bound to score, as it has scored for over a century, a tremendous success.

How to leave home and like it

By MARION GOUGH

Everybody knows that the Roman portiere, that incomparable deus ex machina of every hotel, is the man you naturally turn to when you want a baby sitter, or tickets to the opera at the Baths of Caracalla, or a bottle of Alka Seltzer, or even an audience with the Pope. But this season's returnees report that his latest service is the procurement of tickets to Italy's newest game—baseball. Played by American rules with Latin inflections, it's said to be a pretty unforgettable gala, but won't necessarily make you homesick for Ebbets Field. It's that different! The Coke bottles are authentic, however, although the hot dogs turn out to be salami or sausage between hunks of crusty bread. Games are played in the monumental Foro Italico, formerly known as the Mussolini Forum, a typical example of the outsize, man-dwarfing architecture Il Duce used to go in for, so you can chalk up the afternoon's outing to part of your sight-seeing and not feel guilty for squandering your time.

Another piece of news is that this year more people seem to have caught on to something that the Italians themselves have known for centuries—that there is another enchanted island in the Bay (Please turn to page 303)

The Duchess of Elm Street recommends carpet

Carpet is a great help to a Duchess these days.

Carpet's softness and warmth keep her comfortable when she's doing homework or consulting with friends on the phone. Carpet's quietness muffles her footsteps when she's going to see if there's any cake left, and carpet's safe footing saves mother many anxious moments when the Duchess takes stairs two or three at a time.

In fact, carpet is as indispensable to her parents as it is to the Duchess. For carpet not only brings quiet, comfort and safety to a house — it brings richness and beauty, too. Yet, for all its richness and beauty, for all it does to decorate a room or a home, carpet asks so little in time, care and money. Just once around with a vacuum keeps carpet looking lovely...and prices are far lower than you'd expect.

You can probably carpet two rooms for what you'd imagine one would cost. Stop in at your store this week — see the wonderland of new styles and variety of exciting colors waiting for you.

Don't just look at the carpet you want. Enjoy it—while you pay for it. Take advantage of the budget terms offered by retailers who represent these American manufacturers

Beauty is in vogue again

The purely decorative is coming into favor again.

Characteristics that seemed boring and obsolete fifteen or twenty years ago seem wonderfully new and fresh. The recent past, in home furnishing styling, seems doctrinaire and didactic. This fall you will see a rush of new riches: flowing curving lines, marquetry and inlay, trapunto effects, richly grained woods, iridescence in fabrics and glass, the glitter of gold, the glowing patina of leather. It's all going to be lovely!

is counting again — as wood

The furnishing and decorating world is crossing a threshold to a new set of values. The austere standards that prevailed from about 1935 have been played out to a weary finish. The midsummer furniture markets (viewed by the trade only) made this still more clear. By the time you read this issue, stores and decorators will have the actual goods that will show you a new full-blown trend. These first 20 pages give you a synthesis of what you would find, if you shopped thoroughly.

Most notable of these new manifestations is the lush use of wood as wood and as an inspiration for more than just “functional” pieces. Many designers are using the inherent patterns of beautiful woods as “The Point” of the piece. And these woods are being finished to bring out the charm of the chance variations in the grain. (In the past, wood was finished to produce an unreal, mechanical uniformity—by bleaching, staining, filling.) The marquetry top of this dining table by Baker is a perfect example of the new trend. Its scrubbed, oatmeal brown color is the true color of freshly-sawed wood. The same natural colors repeat in the Boris Kroll silk and linen upholstery fabric.

Wood

Wood is counting again — as wood

This impressive buffet, designed by John Abbate for the Romweber Company, has a sophisticated version of the old board-and-batten type of construction: walnut frames richly figured panels of narra, a Philippine fruitwood like our American cherry. The hardware, legs and hinges are gleaming brass, treated to resist tarnish. Interior fittings accommodate silver hollow ware, flatware, table linens.

The interplay of graining in this elegant combination of natural-color teak and ebony in a harlequin design makes a sleek and decorative top for this dining table designed by Milo Baughman for the Arch Gordon Company. The top is mounted on a dark ebony base planned to afford maximum knee room. The buffet in the background makes a quiet and harmonious contrast with its caned doors and drawer fronts of teak and walnut.

A handsome buffet in simply grained but rich brown walnut achieves a highly decorative effect by a parquetry of cross-graining which relates the recessed door-pulls to the over-all design of the whole piece. This was designed by Ray Sabota for Mount Airy Furniture Co.

This versatile cabinet from Harvey Probber, Inc., for either bedroom or dining room, has flamelike grained rosewood doors, framed and cased in mahogany, stained almost as dark as oriental teak. The legs of highly compressed layers of wood repeat the effect of the rosewood. Interior is fitted with sliding trays, adjustable shelves, deep drawers.

Wood contrasting with wood gives this cocktail table a romantic whiff of tradition, because of its inlaid star of strongly contrasted rosewood and holly in a background of cherry. It is mounted on cherry legs, designed by Dick Pfeferle for the S. J. Campbell Company.

Iridescence, the new dimension in your decorating

What is iridescence?

It is, first of all, a beauty of nature's own devising.

It is the shimmer of butterfly wings, the metallic glow of a beetle's back, the pearly luster of a shell. It's the two-color bloom on the leaves of tender cabbage plants, now purple, now green (see our cover).

It's the phosphorescence of a fresh-caught mackerel, the two tones on the skin of apricots, the blue-gray throat of a dove, the nacre of mother-of-pearl.

It's the plumage of peacock and pheasant.

It's the imprisoned fire of a black opal.

It is fire itself.

We define it variously as luminescence, opalescence. Call it what you will. No one word expresses the life that lives in moving colors played against each other. It's nature's phenomenon which, through the ages, man has tried to capture in the work of his own hands.

Man has succeeded greatly. He has fixed this beautiful quality in glass with color as evanescent as a soap bubble, in glazes, in enamels, and, not least, he has put it into fabrics. Even into the new leathers this pearly glow has found its way, though the effect, ever so pleasing to the eye, is too elusive for the camera to capture.

Collectors' renewed interest in Louis Tiffany's Favrite glass (made around the early 1900's) shows how keen is the enjoyment of this kind of beauty. The ancient, as well as the modern, ceramist found the secret of firing iridescence into pottery. The collector treasures bits of Persian glass buried for centuries in ancient tombs, not only because of the rareness of such antiquities, but because the patina resulting from this entombment has left an unearthly iridescence.

Through the ages man has been fixing this iridescence in fabrics. But this year we see iridescence gaining a new impetus in materials all about us. It shows its alive and beautiful face everywhere.

We have long been familiar with the iridescence of changeable taffetas. These crisp, glimmering fabrics prompt in us a nostalgic remembrance of rustling ball gowns, of gay parties, of great houses (Please turn to page 179)

Close-ups of two Janus tables by Dunbar show inserts of Louis Tiffany tiles. Such tables could be the little jewels among your furniture. The fabrics, art pieces, even the bit of blue wallpaper, show the bright aliveness we call iridescence. The opal (left) is from Tiffany & Co.; unset Australian opal is from de Sedle's. Fabrics (below) reflect the radiance of the Favrile glass, the Chinese porcelain flower. Fragile goblet and decanter of Lobmeyr crystal, the Belleek cup and saucer, and the antique luster pitcher have similar sparkle. So also does the red and orange foil paper. For a complete listing of fabrics and objects, see page 246.

This is what we mean by using iridescence in your decorating. Shimmering fabric (Jack L. Larsen) makes the Dunbar sofa a perfect companion piece for slender, curving Janus coffee table, inlaid with two Tiffany tiles. Additional Tiffany pieces are wall plaques and flower container. All have the fire that flashes from black opals.

The mélange of fabrics, ceramics and glass (below) shows the many ways iridescence is captured. Opalescence is reflected in many of the fabrics, one of which is the sofa material (above) woven with bright Metlon yarn for extra brilliance. PINNEY & BEECHER where they were the stuff of draperies that billowed from high Victorian windows. They were tufted on luxurious headboards, stretched on the padded seats of ballroom chairs.

Why is this particular type of fabric so wondrous? Why does it so stir the imagination? Why do we love the way silk taffetas shimmer their several colors against each other, now seeming to be one color, now another? Two colors in one fabric, evanescent, shifting, changing from one to the other as your eye travels or your hand crushes the material!

It is this movement of color, this aliveness, this changeableness, that is never static, that excites us.

Now this changeableness of color abounds around us, waiting to be used for extra enrichment in our decorating schemes. The immense postwar popularity of Thaibok silks from Thailand may have been, in no small measure, due to their iridescence. This may have sparked our desire to see similar fabrics produced in our own studios and mills. Certainly our weavers have produced a wealth of hand-weaves blended with variations of color, accelerated with colored Metlon and Lurex that have a jewel-like quality. Now American power looms are making two-toned fabrics with an under-color of black or blue or green or whatever, against which another color vibrates, giving off an iridescent quality. We find this not only in smooth silks, but in fine cottons, nylons, rayons and Celanese, and in blends of all. Sometimes the fabric has an ombré effect, sometimes the changeableness of tone is gained in a close striation of yarns of similar tone over a warp of a contrasting color. Fortunately there are types for upholstery as well as for draperies and bedspreads.

Think how stimulating the use of these two-toned fabrics with this changeable characteristic can be in a monochromatic scheme. A room might seem all golden until you viewed a certain chair in a certain light, and discovered that its golden hue was really a luscious shade of ruddy peach. If you choose to use these iridescent fabrics, you gain more drama by selecting those with quite a degree of difference in the two colors. This sort of variation of tonal quality is more arresting than when it appears in closely related colors of the same family.

This preoccupation with iridescence can now be indulged in many categories of merchandise. Look for it in woven blinds and in carpets, particularly of the handmade variety. There are beautiful leathers (American Leather Company, for one) for chair seats or for the top of a table or desk, ranging in colors from golden beiges through jade greens and blues. Even wallpapers have caught the contagion. You can buy foil paper with exciting iridescence to put on a ceiling, to line a breakfront, or to make colorful covers for the books on your shelves. We show two such papers on page 177, one from Laverne Originals and one from Murals, Inc.

This fall put some of this beauty-making quality into your rooms.

Even furniture has joined the parade. Now Dunbar Furniture Company has brought forth a new group of tables inlaid with dazzling iridescent glass tiles made by Louis Comfort Tiffany 40 years ago. You see close-ups of two of these tables on page 177. On the next two pages we show you larger pictures of these tables for closer study.

These are the Janus tables of Dunbar, each a little gem of perfection, whose handsomely grained walnut tops frame inserts of iridescent Louis Comfort Tiffany tiles. What nicer way could be found to preserve the beauty of these jewel-like tiles than to give them a setting in a useful table that can be enjoyed in daily living! There is a table for every need, available through decorators for as long as the limited supply of tiles lasts. The tables are of walnut, further embellished with a sap-streak finish, and were designed by Edward Wormley. Explore for yourself this excitement of iridescence by owning one of these sparkling tables which could easily become a treasured heirloom of tomorrow.

Or, if this seems too ambitious, treat yourself to some of the new iridescent glassware. Be dazzled by this shimmering ware, whether in gold luster or in sapphire blue, or in amber, red or amethyst. Serve tea from fragile Belleek cups, and thrill to the pale primrose luster that has been captured in white china.

Iridescence doesn't have to cost money. Watch for it in plants, in fruits, in shells from the seashore, and even in lowly rocks. Those that flash back this iridescence, use to build center pieces. Make myriads of gay pillows in changeable taffeta or cover a chair in changeable nylon.

We have collected groups of fabrics and art objects for these pictures, and for our cover, that reflect this new way with color. All the fabrics are available through decorators. Some of the glassware is old, some new. The Louis Tiffany pieces all belong to proud collectors. Most of the Beatrice Wood ceramics are from museum exhibitions, although several may be purchased. They were all chosen to illustrate what we mean by iridescence. If you look, you will see it all about you. Put some of it into your new fall color scheme and enjoy the esthetic lift it gives you.

This fascinating group of Janus tables includes six in all, two not shown here. There is a lamp table (above) with gracefully curved shelf. Tables (right) can be used in groups. Notice the charm of the softened edge, the use of the sap-streak as a part of the design. In tables (opposite) note restrained use of tiles and their sensitive modern placement. Embellishment gains by being understated.

The enrichment

A panel of old Japanese wood carving seemed a lovely thing to the John McGuires. So they unhesitatingly mounted it as an over-door ornament in their quite contemporary house. Their spontaneous wish "to have it around to look at" is typical of what is happening everywhere to the young and the modern, who, ten years ago, would most likely have considered this quite improper.

The John McGuires discovered a pair of Chinese pewter fish mounted on black lacquer panels. So they bought them and mounted them as push plates on opposite sides of the swinging door between their kitchen and dining room.

Unusually fine "hikite" from Japan are set into the closet doors in Marian Forbes's bedroom. Of bronze, ornamented with enameled flowers, they are a pleasure to touch and look at. They also contrast pleasantly with grasscloth into which they are set.

of plain surfaces

There is something in the nature of man, as there is in Nature herself, that abhors a vacuum and hastens to fill it with more than void. In this respect the modernist movement with its blank white walls and unrelieved monotony, its stark contrast of one plain surface against another, has slowly been brewing a revolt spurred by a hunger for enrichment.

Filling the void, meeting the need for pattern and appropriate ornament, for the enhancing touch of beauty, designers and decorators are creating new hardware with a jewel-like quality, rediscovering and re-employing with taste and distinction older forms, such as carved and sculptured wood. Plaques and decorative brackets are being discovered again, often by the homeowner on his own, and put to triumphant use. We see in homes everywhere a new sense of individuality and of the unexpected that makes a home more than (Please turn to page 274)

Try these on your problem room

Here is a group of new furniture components designed to solve your own special problems. The collection includes 20 basic pieces, each complete in itself, but all can fit on or beside each other, so you can combine them to suit yourself. The units, in natural grained walnut, include chests with drawers and cupboards with sliding doors of cane or glass. Legs are available in various heights or the pieces can be mounted on benches to fit your special needs. We have shown three possibilities of the endless ways these units can be used to give you that "custom" look. This group was designed by F. B. Arthur for Brown-Saltman, Calif.

Old art for a new look

Stone rubbings from wall carvings of the Han Dynasty of second-century China have been carefully reproduced to make a handsome new mural-like wallpaper. It is available on white, silver, or gold grounds with black print, and settles into an over-all effect that makes a contemporary background for either old or new furniture. The paper was created by Albert Van Luit. A set consisting of 4 panels on 11'6" strips, covering 9 linear feet, and a 3-roll bolt of the textured ground costs $75.

You want dim lights?

Ladies whose best effects are by candlelight and their husbands who find television intolerable in normal room light will welcome this brand new lamp dimmer which enables them to fix the intensity of light in any room to suit their own demands. It's portable, you plug it in and attach your lamps to it, then just adjust the switch to the quality of light you want at the moment. Because it is light, you can move it around, obviating usual installation charges for more elaborate controls. This device was designed by E. # Furniture that revives the age-old art of parquetry

By SARA LITTLE

We are seeing the rebirth of parquetry—an old, highly skilled technique of the master woodworker, by which strips of contrasting woods are cunningly inset into solid wood to create ornamental pattern. Thanks to this craft, new furniture, like the Sophisticate Collection by Tomlinson of High Point, has the preciousness of an object created by the human hand

A parquetry of butternut veneers, in blocks of opposing grains, panels the drawers of this triple dresser. Dresser itself is solid pecan, the basic wood of all this furniture. Doors of center cabinets, which can hold hats and handbags, are vertical "planking."

Squares of myrtle burl, in a satiny, swirling, light-catching grain, are set like panes of glass in the cabinet (right) and used again in door panels of sideboard. Drawer pulls, like elongated diamonds, are antiqued metal. Drawer fronts are butternut.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY VINCENT LISANTI, ALDERMAN STUDIOS

A subtle suggestion of the diamond shape runs throughout this furniture. See it in the pointed legs, in parquetry, in hardware, in the Baronio quilted cotton on the boomerang-shape sectional sofas. Frame and back stretchers are exposed pecan. Coffee table top is a block mosaic of myrtle-burl squares. Armchair fabric, Cheney-Greeff.

Certain recurring elements of design—all of them dependent upon fine cabinet work—show up in every one of these pieces: precisely mitered framing which creates a pattern around all of the drawers, softly rounded turnings at the leg joinings. Yet each piece is individual, different. Desk top is inset with a herringbone pattern of zebrawood. Rug is a Cabin Crafts.

Further proof that wood is coming into its own is the new prevalence of exposed framing on upholstered pieces. Sofa here seems to be embraced by the curving frame of pecan. See, too, how wood is manipulated to follow the rounded contour of the cane-back chairs. A sunburst of butternut veneer patterns the cocktail table. Lamps are from Lightolier.

To the eye, this furniture has such delicacy that its high degree of function is not immediately apparent. Extension table, surfaced in an exquisite crossbar of butternut set into pecan, extends to 42" x 94" with two fillers. Diamond-footed cabinet, parquetry with zebrawood, serves living, dining or bedroom.

Furniture that revives the age-old art of parquetry continued

This warm parquetry of woods creates such a variety of ornamental pattern that single pieces of furniture become unique in themselves. So for the first time in many years, furniture has personality. You may even feel as if you could fall in love with it, treasuring it for its grace and craftsmanship, just as you might cherish a precious, handcrafted heirloom

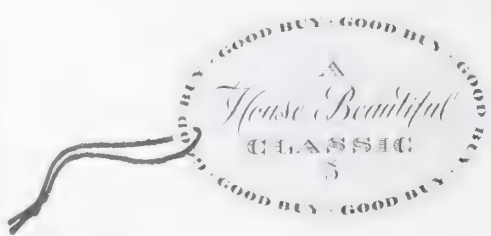

Furniture like this sideboard, parquetry in slim, elegant panels of myrtle burl, given dimension and pattern by the perfect mitering of its door frames, has the precious, cherishable quality of an antique.

This divider table, topped in richly mottled Portuguese marble and patterned in a herringbone parquet of zebrawood, has extraordinary usefulness that belies its looks. Equipped with cabinet, three drawers, and shelves, it could also be console, sofa table or sideboard.

CLASSIC No. 10

Timelessly pure design, many-faceted usefulness, and adaptability to all sorts of surrounding furnishings give this adjustable Sligh "High-Lo" table by Grand Rapids Chair Company the right to be called a classic—furniture for which we foresee a long and serviceable life. It is two pieces of furniture in one: With its graceful scissors legs raised to full height, it is a square card or snack table; with its legs scissored down, it is a coffee table. Beautifully built of all mahogany, this is a Good Buy, fairly priced at $79.50.

By a simple, easy-to-make adjustment, the "High-Lo" rises from coffee-table height to a smooth, gleaming-surfaced dining, card or reading table, 27" high and 36" square with its two dropleaves raised.

As a coffee table, the "High-Lo" stands 17½" off the floor and 21" wide with side leaves down. When leaves are raised, as for the informal buffet below, they lock sturdily in place.

Some pleasures and problems of modern painting

By ROY McMULLEN

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL's Contributing Editor

"Modern artists, such as Picasso, are always present in their distortions to a degree in which Raphael is never present in one of his perfect Madonnas."

COLLECTION OF MUSEUM OF MODERN ART, NEW YORK

Modern painting, its enemies have been saying for the last 80 years, is painting in which the subjects, the thing represented, is distorted or destroyed. Ultra-modern pictures are simply those in which nothing can be recognized.

That's not a bad definition. Of course the "subject" of any work of art in any period may be just a pretext, and artists have always been rather high-handed. In a thousand years, said Michelangelo, no one would care what the Medici looked like. Still, nothing since the early Middle Ages quite equals the way modern painters execute their subjects. And anyone who likes the results, as I do, can be needled by a good question: What have we gained by this refusal to imitate nature?

That we have lost something is certain. No modern painter (my definition excludes our traditionalists) attempts the psychological profundity of a Rembrandt portrait, for example, or the terror of a Tintoretto crucifixion, or the pathos of the wrinkles that David noted in Napoleon's stockings. The qualities which sprang from a moral emphasis on subject matter are today diluted or missing.

Not all of these qualities were great. We can get along without some of the platitudes which comforted our ancestors. Yet we can't help feeling that painting has become less central. Intent on esthetic problems, it no longer makes direct statements about the big, fascinating banalities of life.

It has also become less easy to enjoy. It has cut its literary moorings and sailed off toward the abstract arts, toward the realm of music, pottery and architecture, toward the country of connoisseurs. Some of today's pictures are as subtle, as hard to see, as the spatial relations in a fine building which has no history, and hence no guide to tell us stories while we look. We have lost the accessibility of the old masters.

What do we have left? I think we have some pleasures which our grandparents, with their attention fettered by anecdotes, messages and resemblances, often overlooked. We are like people who, having misplaced the words to a song, suddenly notice how expressive melody alone can be. In short, we have the pleasures of painting itself, liberated and intensified.

High on my list is a new awareness of pictorial personality. The individuality of today's painting styles makes the styles of the Sixteenth Century, for instance, look like assembly-line jobs, which, to an extent not usually admitted, they were. One might even risk the word "fun" here, for, although modern artists are serious people, dedicated to purposes ranging from the lyric to the cosmic, in their choice of means, they are not afraid of wit, not above spoofing the staidness of our visual habits.

Looking at certain Picassos is like watching a cross between a hilarious bullfight and the slaying of Lewis Carroll's Jabberwock:

One, two! One, two!

And through and through

The vorpal blade went snicker-snack!

Naturally, the coffee pot, the girl's head, or whatever the ostensible subject may be, does not survive in its original state. If the bull wins, isn't the show a flop? Bull-fighting, Picasso would say, isn't really about bulls, and painting isn't really about coffee pots and girls' heads.

The matador analogy is far from adequate. Obviously, it doesn't apply to those abstract painters who scorn even a preliminary reference to subject matter, who won't even let the bull into the ring. All we see in a picture by Jackson Pollock is the flashing vorpal blade, or rather the darting drip of the paint bucket. Nor does it suit the gentle genius of a Paul Klee, whose works are like little machines, innocent machines. And it won't do for the many painters, both figurative and abstract, who produce a sort of handwriting whose appeal is like that of Japanese calligraphy.

But all these styles are royally unhampered by consideration for the rights of the subject. And we feel about a good Picasso what Coleridge felt about certain lines of Wordsworth: if we were to meet it in a forsaken wilderness we would instantly shout "Picasso!" Modern artists are always present in their distortions to a degree in which Raphael is never present in one of his perfect Madonnas.

Next on my list is the pleasure in the forms which emerge when a subject is thoroughly executed. This kind of creation is, to be sure, a kind of destruction. Just as Don Giovanni's words are pulled out of their normal shapes in Mozart's music, so if the girl's head is symmetric and the picture calls for asymmetry, something has to give. And we all know what does give.

No truly modern painter has ever been accused of falling in love with his subject like Pygmalion. "Above all," Matisse once said, "I do not create women, I paint pictures." His countryman Jacques Villon is as explicit as a dentist: "I have to extract rhythms and volumes from the subjects, just as one has to extract a diamond from a vein of rock." Snicker-snack.

But this ruthlessness has paid off. We haven't had, in Western art at least, such a flowering of new shapes, patterns and rhythms, such a burst of pure invention, since the great (Please turn to page 256)

TIME TO TAKE A NEW LOOK AT

THE MODERN EPICURE

If you think you have already made up your mind about California wine, if you've heard and believed that "they may be all right as vin ordinaire but nothing special," maybe you have another think coming.

Twenty-five years have now passed since Repeal. Techniques have improved enormously. Vineyards replanted with the great wine grapes of the Continent have had an opportunity to come into full bearing. Most important of all, more and more of our vintners are becoming quality- rather than merely quantity-minded.

As a result, we now have fairly well distributed in many parts of the United States a group of premium or great-name wines—the top wines of California. They comprise only 4 per cent of the total production, but they represent an extraordinary advance. No longer are they pale and wan imitations called Burgundy, Bordeaux and Sauternes. They now carry the proud names of their own locales. Sound and worthy, they can hold their own anywhere.

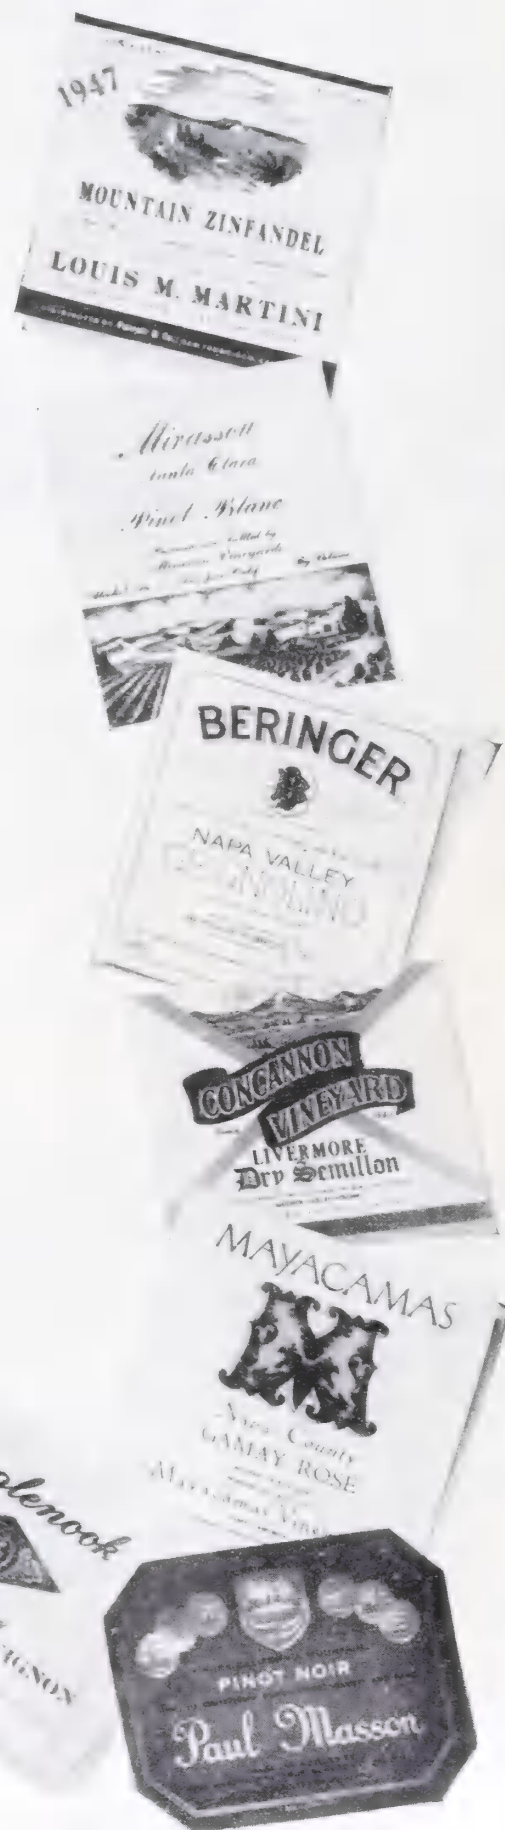

If you find all this hard to believe, taste for yourself. The next time you give a party, when you plan to serve at least two bottles of wine, serve your favorite French wine and along with it a California wine of approximately the same character. (You will find a list of suggested pairs on page 267.) Present both wines in wrapped bottles or in decanters marked for identification, and provide two glasses for each guest, also marked.

Ask yourself, ask your guests: "Which is the import? Which do you prefer?" You will find it's not an easy test. Your answers may amaze you.

Even those with the most highly educated palates, who can easily discern the origin of almost any wine, have been heard to say, with delight and surprise: "It's not that California wines are so similar to French, but in their own right so good."

You will find that comparative tests of French and American wine pairs make excellent conversation at any party, but they do far more. They help to educate the palate and (Please turn to page 266)

for under $25,000

2 Furniture that regroups and recomposes in many ways and in any room

By FRANCES HEARD

One of the most felicitous facts of life in mid-century America is the fast rate at which custom-order comforts and amenities are finding their way into ready-made houses and furnishings so that great numbers of us can now enjoy them. This, for instance, is a seven-room, $23,500 tract house, built in Sherman Oaks, Calif., by the Modern Trend Construction Company. Yet it has four generous-size bedrooms and three baths. It stands on a $9,250 lot and has $2,000 worth of landscaping and fences. Wall-to-wall carpeting is included in sale price. It was furnished by Barker Brothers, Los Angeles, with "Counterpoint," an ingeniously adaptable collection of furniture designed by John Van Koert for the Drexel Furniture Company, ready-made in 1956.

There's hardly a piece of this furniture that cannot serve another function or fit appropriately into different surroundings. Woods are delicately grained mahogany trim against the bolder grain of wild cherry, used on broad surfaces. A few years ago, such a wall of glass doors opening onto a terrace would hardly be expected of a tract house.

One of the many niceties in this development house is the solid wall of window at one end of the kitchen. This opens up the whole room, increasing the sense of spaciousness, and provides a charming breakfast corner overlooking a planted area outside. "Junior"-size table extends to 96". Chairs have slip seats, easily recovered.

Rarely in the past would a tract house offer such a commodious bedroom. This master bedroom can accommodate twin beds, night chest, lounge chair, dressers, and the desk and chair shown here. Headboards are beautifully simple cherrywood panels, banded in mahogany. Night chest, between beds, has two drawers and a lower shelf.

The entrance hall gives a first impression of spaciousness, enhanced by a wall pattern of concrete block which is reminiscent of a shoji, hence suggests space beyond. Built-in planting ledge is another refinement once seen exclusively in custom-built houses. Cupboard, shown as a hall console, has two shelves, could go anywhere. Brass pulls on case pieces are centered in cherry discs.

The realistic engineering that went into the design of this serving cart would once have had to be commissioned on special order. Besides a Formica top surface and a movable center shelf, it has drop leaves which rise to extend the serving area from 34" to 62½". These leaves go down flush with the frame, becoming solid side panels, giving cart the look of a stationary serving table or bar.

Divider deck, with three gracefully extending shelves, forms a break-front when it's stacked on the five-drawer buffet (also shown above). Far right, same divider, set on a coffee table, turns into a low bookcase. Since case pieces have same wood, finish and trim, as well as compatible dimensions, they all go together perfectly.

Left to right, see how the uniform height and depth of three "Counterpoint" chests and two storage decks let them group into three different "pieces" of storage for a dining room. The same chests may be used individually or with different top units. Both decks have two shelves and magnetic door catches. Double-door deck, with its subtle T-pattern created by mahogany trim, and the broad three-drawer bachelor chest compose the highboy on page 197. Small chest might be a lamp table.

Now see how the double-door storage deck, set on the same extension table you saw in the dining room, creates this modern, room-dividing version of the old French secrétaire. The table is a writing or reading surface and the deck accommodates stationery, files, etc. Note that high storage decks like this permit full use of upper walls, which are often wasted.

MAYNARD PARKER

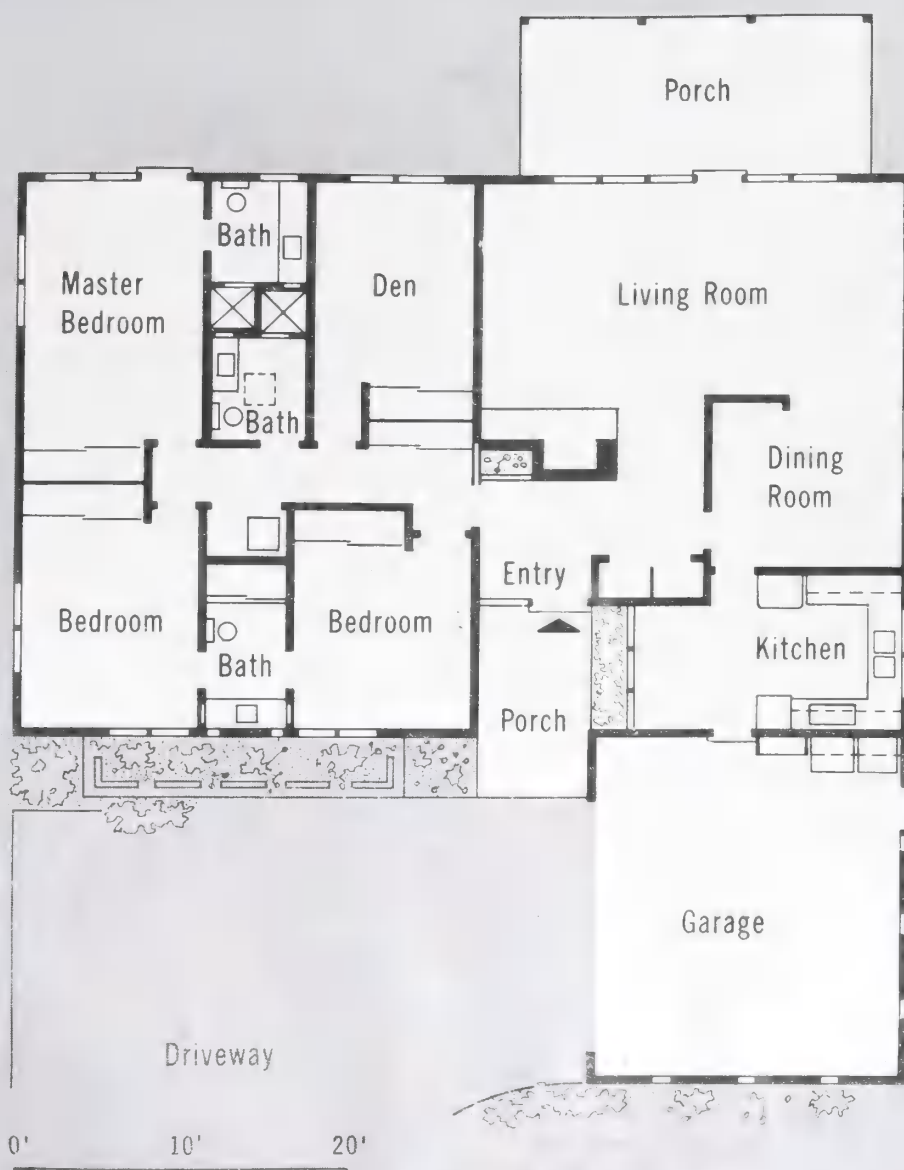

This desk answers a crying need that would formerly call for a custom-made solution. It's a real working desk, but in living-room-calibre design. It not only provides a pull-out shelf at the right height for a typewriter, but also stores the typewriter in a tambour cupboard built into its base. Pedestal contains a deep file drawer and a paper drawer. A long flush drawer is set into the apron.

Typical of the stylish detail that is now going into tract houses, the porch ceiling outside the living room is patterned with beams which present a visually interesting texture when seen from inside. A Transite fence and cast-concrete stepping stones are landscaping features.

Floor plan of this house, which is copyrighted by its builders, shows realistic appreciation for the requirements of pleasant modern living. Bedroom wing is separated from busy living area. Den is usable as a fourth bedroom.

Furniture with the emotional appeal of ornament

By MARION GOUGH

It is probably the emotionally satisfying presence of ornament that gives the new furniture its essential newness. It has been so long since designers dared disturb the "purity" of functional forms with added embellishment that our eyes are hungry for the sight of pattern and variety. It comes as such a spontaneous delight that we realize how very real has been our emotional need for such eye-appealing, extra beauty in objects of daily use.

You see this new or, rather, newly discovered ornamental play of wood against wood, this renewed acknowledgment of the age-old craft of cabinetry, on these five pages in the Johnson Furniture Company's "Forward Trend" collection of living room, dining room and bedroom furniture. Ornament here is intrinsically part of the furniture, not mere applied furbelow. Designer Bert England, of Cannell and England, exploits the color and grain of walnut, the basic construction wood, and teak, creating patterns of walnut in light and dark tones, composing "tiles" of teak veneer in a modern mosaic, which is the collection's signature. Architectural settings here are by Cannell and Chaffin. Virginia Arnold of that firm was the decorator.

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILLIAM HOWLAND

An eye-pleasing "tiling" of teak veneers composed in a mosaic-like pattern covers door panels of the walnut sideboard, shown partly open, left. This mosaic motif runs like a theme through the whole collection. Legs are brass and the top is surfaced with travertine.

An esthetically satisfying pattern of straight walnut graining juxtaposed with teak veneer on cabinet doors makes this clean-lined, highly useful chest-cupboard an ornament in itself. Brass-bound game or dining table, below, is dark walnut with a circular center inset of teak. Rug, V'Soske. Lamp, Hollywood Lighting Fixture. All interior paints custom-mixed by Martin-Senour.

The emotional appeal of ornament

New furniture, embellished by patternings of wood against wood, is making us realize how great is the human eye's pleasure in ornament, which transforms mere function into pure delight

Eye-intriguing brass grillwork, inset over panels of this walnut headboard, is applied ornament, but made to seem an intrinsic part of the furniture. Pattern on chest is achieved by beveled moldings. Tables are marble-topped. Fabric, Boris Kroll. Brass, Stembridge Co., Gulistan carpet, Karagheusian.

Cane-back chairs with pale walnut frames, combined with a table of dark walnut in contrasting grains, create interesting color pattern. Seats are white leather, Upholstery Leather Group. White leather and walnut-stick blinds, Webb Textiles. Tableware, E. A. Rood & Company. Sterling, Oneida Heirloom.

Sectional sofas, in a Boris Kroll fabric which echoes the mosaic motif in this collection, have airy walnut frames, look handsome back and front. Sofa table, paved in teak mosaic, opens by brass rings to become a dining table. Marble-top coffee table is webbed with leather strappings.

Roll out the red carpet

By VIRGINIA STANTON

House Beautiful's Party Editor

The entertaining season is rolling around again so it is time to examine that much-abused party device called "the cocktail party." What was wrong with the ones you went to in the past—and the ones you gave? Did they last too long? Were they marked by crushed masses of people who couldn't hear each other talk for the noise? Did people try to make a meal out of the hors d'oeuvres in lieu of real food? When should a cocktail party be truly an eating party, and how is the hostess to manage both types of food at the same time?

I'll tell you what I think, and it may help clarify what you think and what you do.

I think a cocktail party that extends over several hours (such as from 5 to 8) must be planned so that a lot of substantial food can be eaten by those who want it. Since the time of arrival is casual, some will come before they go to the theater and others will come after late appointments. The theater-goer can't manage both a cocktail party and a dinner, so your food offerings should be hearty enough to hold them till after the show, when they can get a late supper. And those people who come early and stay and stay certainly need to be fed, if for no other reason than public safety on the highways. In short, if the drinking period extends over a period of time, the hostess should plan for really hearty eating, with a real meal to be served at the end—say after 8:30—for those who are still around.

To keep yourself from tiring, so you will be able to produce a real meal after most of the guests have gone, you need to be organized properly. The cocktail part of the party must not leave you limp and worn down. Everything about your planning affects this goal.

It starts with the selection of your guests, for after all they actually "make" the party. If your guests do not "go together," no amount of effort on your part will save the party from being a flop. So don't start with the thought of "paying back" all the people who have entertained you. Too many cocktail parties are motivated by wanting to get rid of one's obligations in one fell swoop. I would much rather have the friends I want, even if I have had them several times without being asked to their house. You will have more fun yourself (Please turn to page 301)

that make you

When a cocktail party is to turn into a supper party for a few lingerers, special arrangements need to be made to keep the facilities of the early part of the evening from interfering with the second part. Here, in the home of Mrs. Ralph Hammonds, of Pebble Beach, California, Virginia Stanton has arranged for self-service of the food itself, but she has provided sit-down places for those who remain to eat a meal. Danish furniture from R. M. Kasper, Table linen, coffee cups, dinner plates from Corner Cupboard, Carmel, Calif. Blue casseroles are Dru-iron, imported from Holland by Evans International. Sterling flatware is "Autumn Leaves" from Reed and Barton. Note how sliding door can close off kitchen from dining area. Robert Stanton was the architect for the Hammonds house.

Fiction, fantasy and fairy tales on film

By CECILE STARR

House Beautiful's Home Movie Editor

Good films for the family have been so scarce for so long that when suddenly several dozen fine productions come along it's an inundation. Family viewers will be the first to rejoice in the new selection of animation films, each group having its unique technique and each involved with the wonderful world of make-believe.

To give a brief introduction to all the riches that are described more fully below, we have at long last five of those enchanting UPA cartoons. Then we have seven films by Morton Schindel which brings to life the color drawings and stories of outstanding children's books. In addition, there is a series of silhouette films by Lotte Reiniger, familiar fairy tales recreated in her distinctly original style. And last, if a lagniappe is needed among all these other delicacies, there is a new batch of short Disney cartoons, plus the charming full-length "Dumbo," recently released for 16mm showings.

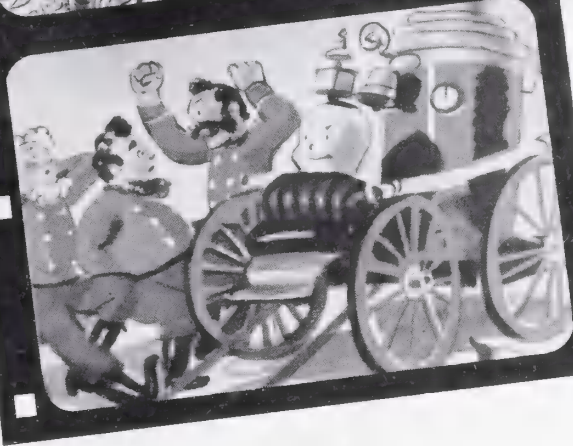

You'll be wise to plan your children's film parties right away and order the films as soon as possible for the coming months. Rental and/or sales information is given for each group of films as well as the source of distribution.

If the UPA cartoons come first on my list, it is at least partly because I, with many others, have waited so long for them to be released for home consumption. This group of five color cartoons clearly capsules the new look in animation which UPA has ushered in during the ten years of its existence. It is a style which exudes a joy of living and a good-natured humaneness, seldom before found in comedy cartoons. Gerald McBoing Boing, Currently available on 16mm animated film are many make-believe favorites for the young at heart as well as children.

Story book tales, charmingly reproduced on film in black and white and color, are the perfect entertainment for a children's party.

for example, has made a name for itself even among the people who can't remember the name. They vaguely recall that it was about a boy, whose real name was Gerald McCoy, who couldn't speak words, but, perhaps as a tribute to this mechanical age, went "boing boing" instead. Its witty rhymed narration, based on a character conceived by "Dr. Seuss," bounces along with one delightful scene and surprising sound after another. It won an Academy Award for UPA and is sheer delight for everybody.

Madeline, an almost exact, word-for-word, picture-for-picture translation of the Bemelmans book, adds only movement, a delightful pace and a woman's voice to what is already a wonderfully appealing story. If you don't know both the book and the film, you've denied your children and yourself one of life's riches. It tells in rhyme about twelve little girls who live in a Paris school. The youngest and smallest is Madeline, one of the most unforgettable characters you'll ever meet. The humor is gentle and real, just right for family entertainment. And it's a film that is just as enjoyable the second time as the first.

Family Circus evokes some sound psychological thinking in its fanciful behavior of an older child, as finally revealed in a drawing which her perplexed father discovers. As soon as he realizes that she is jealous of baby brother, he decides that the solution is to pay more attention to her. It is, indeed, a family circus. I can't be sure whether children will enjoy it or not, but I rather suspect that they will. (Please turn to page 295)

Everyone will delight in such UPA characters as Gerald McBoing Boing, Mr. Magoo, and Madeline, now on film for home use.

Fall is the time to remodel the garden

By DR. JOSEPH E. HOWLAND

*Don't overlook the outdoors when you remodel.
Your dollars stretch three times farther when buying outdoor living space. Work started now pays off in permanently better living within six months.*

Fall always brings a certain amount of change, in the garden anyhow—overcrowded iris or daylilies to be dug and divided, wind-whipped lilies or delphinium to be moved to sheltered spots, storm-damaged trees to be repaired and their tops thinned out, new roses to be added, shrubs to be planted, a lawn to be redone, fences to be built or paths to be paved.

The days are crisp and sunny—pleasant for plants and planter. Sunsets are early, a warning to plants to prepare for winter, meaning to confine their growing efforts to pushing forth new roots from now until spring. This insures that fall-moved plants get a big head start over those that don't get into the ground until spring. Lawn grasses grow nearly all winter, so scars from construction work disappear fastest when re-seeding can be done in the fall. But don't delay. It's already late for fall (Please turn to page 283)

1 Remodel this fall and your garden can be as colorful as this next spring. Lawns trampled and torn up, and soil packed unavoidably by construction, have a winter in which to heal.

2 Even evergreens are safely transplanted in the fall. Keep them well watered right through the first winter and shaded from winter sun, too, to keep the leaves from baking dry.

4 Plants are resting now, have no new tender growths or swollen buds to fall off when bumped as in the spring. Shoots are rubbery, not crisp. Rhododendron here stayed; smaller plants were dug and replanted out of the way in a temporary home away from construction hazards.

Garden remodeling by Dan Kiley, Landscape Architect

New garden takes advantage of existing trees by threading its new fences through them to capture fine views and screen service yards. House sits atop high foundation but doesn't seem to because the big sunpocket terrace (west side) is raised up to floor level. Breezy, cool midsummer terrace is at a lower level but skillfully made to seem conveniently near the broad sweep of lawn built up at the back door. Off-street parking for a dozen cars is provided by the new plan, with all cars handy to a covered path to house.

Investigate the unusual but appropriate; here, coconuts with a burst of blossoms from coconut palm.

IN HOME OF MRS. PHILIP SPALDING, HONOLULU

Rare Chien Lung apple green lacquer table is so light and feathery that any arrangement for it should be equally delicate. Here nandina branch echoes and heightens setting.

Flower arrangements don't exist in a vacuum. The total environment is what you must calculate in order to get the best results

Why do the flowers in some houses always look as though nothing else would be quite so fine for the spot? The secret really isn't difficult to find. Begin by looking not just at the flower arrangement but at the over-all use that is made of it. Study the photographs on these four pages as Lesson 1. Note the rightness of flowers and container for each other. Both are appropriate to each other and to the location—in scale, weight, capacity, and visual importance. They are also in sympathy with the feeling of the room. Always the flowers are kept healthy and happy, a good point to recall when tempted to crowd a big plant into a too-small container.

Remember, too, that container and flowers must not compete for attention: Quite ordinary flowers become like jewels, treasures in an exciting setting, while strikingly beautiful flowers should have a more quiet container that people won't notice. No matter what the inborn quality, though, the container must be right in color for the particular flower and leaf colors. Failure here is common, often making fine plants look tired and old.

Start now to assemble your own collection of containers, linking them to your preferences in decorating and plants. And study "the complete picture" at every chance.

Which bamboo is real, which only wallpaper? The merger is so imaginative and appropriate that illusional depths are created which make the flat walls almost non-existent. Home of Mrs. Alice Bowen, Honolulu.

Building an agreeable scene with accessories and plant materials calls for discipline and imagination if you want to avoid clutter. Unifying mood here is oriental. The arrangement uses sheared papyrus and old, carved and gilded temple lotus leaves and blossoms. On table is bird-cage summer picnic basket and old Chinese ivory birds. Home of Alice Spalding Bowen.

Bamboo and its own shadows for a plain wall. Tops of bamboo canes are hollowed, then water-filled. Base sits in water hidden below rocks. Canes sprout readily; the leaves remain fresh for a year or more.

Dramatic flowers like the hanging heliconia need only a simple background and a container. This and left photograph, home of Mrs. Philip Spalding, Honolulu.

With such a beautiful Queen Anne lacquer chest and the companion Tuscan 18th-century chairs, the temptation would be to use a small arrangement in an unimportant container. Instead, Mrs. Spalding uses a big Han pottery jar filled with an arresting, fruit-laden branch of the pomegranate that repeats the scale and feeling of the Chinese painting seen beyond. ## Plan now for Chrysanthemums in your garden Success is inherent in chrysanthemums. No matter how little care you give them, chrysanthemum plants set in a moist, sunny site in spring are almost certain to flower in the fall.

But the difference between floppy stems scattered with blossoms and a display like the one shown opposite is a matter of management. It is knowing what to do when, and, more important, of knowing the basic reasons behind each step, so that you can adjust your plan to unusual situations if the need arises. Happily, chrysanthemum needs are few.

Modern chrysanthemums are vigorous plants. In the garden most varieties reach their flowering peak in one growing season. Unlike peonies, they don't improve if left undisturbed from year to year. So, to be certain of quality, all but a very few chrysanthemum varieties should be divided or started anew from cuttings each spring or at least every (Please turn to page 312)

Chrysanthemums—the provident gardener's rich reward—cascade from the wall and fill a terrace corner with their rich color. Plants were grown elsewhere in containers and then brought to the terrace for this final display.

The bar that isn't there

Now you see it, now you don't. We call it the bar that isn't there. It's in the TV room of the Grossblatt home in Los Angeles, a room right off the living room. Guests walk in and see a neatly paneled wood wall (below); somebody mentions a drink, and presto, the wall opens showing a completely stocked bar. Then a hinged shelf drops and the compact, but still spacious bar is open for business (above). Note the easy accessibility of the variety of needed glasses and accessories. Paul Granard was the decorator.

Select the perfect lighting for every activity and mood

You have every level of light...from dark to full bright...with LUXTROL

Dinner is over. You and your guests move to the living-room for coffee. Followed, perhaps, by bridge...TV...or an evening in the recreation room.

Bring your guests quickly into the spirit of whatever you plan... with lighting, controlled to fit the occasion. LUXTROL controlled!

Want soft, romantic "candlelight" dining? A turn of the dial will create exactly the atmosphere you want.

Want to play up or tone down a room setting? Want a room alive with light? A full light...for cards or Ping-Pong? A subdued light... for home movies... or "baby-checking"? You have only to turn a LUXTROL dial!

LUXTROL does away with noisy, old-fashioned on-off switches. Controls both incandescent and fluorescent lighting. It is not a rheostat... but a cool, efficient and safe autotransformer. Made with precision and fine craftsmanship. Approved by Underwriters' Laboratories. And the price is surprisingly low.

when you begin to live better electrically

Caught! One family having fun—together—in their favorite get-together spot! Mom's just pretending to be put out; she knows her teen-agers love to stage a refrigerator raid, especially after an exciting game. And she knows Pop just can't resist joining them for a late, late snack!

This kitchen is planned for family fun, and each red dot ● shows how electricity makes it a center of better living. The roomy refrigerator-freezer holds plenty of food for a hungry family; and you can bet that turkey was done to a turn in the built-in oven (never any stooping to see what's cooking)! The electric mixer provides Bob with a perfect super-shake, and Pop's coffee will be ready in a moment, thanks to the electric kettle. Cleaning up is no chore here, either—the garbage disposer and dishwasher see to that! Electricity provides cheerful atmosphere and proper working light, too.

Is your kitchen a happy combination of efficiency and comfort with the electrical conveniences you need? Plenty of handy outlets? Proper lighting? You can put more low-cost electricity to work in your home—and begin today to live better... electrically.

Spot-Less washing

Two separate 5-minute washings scrub away every trace of food-soil and dulling film. Fresh detergent is automatically released into each of the two separate washes.

Spot-Less rinsing

Super wetting agent is automatically injected into the second of the two hot-water rinses. The rinse-water then spreads over the dishes so smoothly that drops of water cannot form, cannot dry as spots.

Spot-Less drying

This is the automatic result of Spot-Less washing and Spot-Less rinsing, followed by safe and sanitary drying in pure, electrically heated air. China sparkles, glasses gleam, silver glistens — like new!

DOUBLE WASHED, DOUBLE RINSED, AND DRIED — SPOTLESSLY!

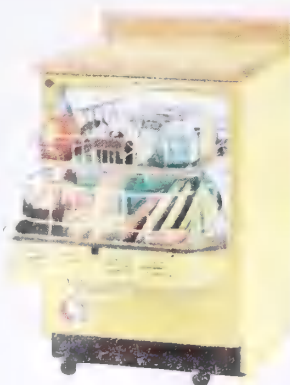

That's the secret of Hotpoint Spot-Less dishwashing

Hotpoint's new electric dishwasher — with its exclusive combination of Spot-Less washing, Spot-Less rinsing, and Spot-Less drying — gets your china, glass, silver, and even cooking pans sparkling bright — as no other dishwashing method can.

You just press a button. That's all you do. Hotpoint's automatic pre-rinse even relieves you of the chore of hand-rinsing.

A full dinner service for 4 can be double-washed, double-rinsed, and dried in any Hotpoint Dishwasher. Many families find it will do a full day's dishes at one time. The upper rack alone holds 31 glasses.

Both racks roll out separately for easy loading. All Hotpoint dishwashers load from the front — the convenient way that's preferred by homemakers better than 4 to 1 over loading procedures required with ordinary racks.

Maple-top Mobile model on wheels (left) requires no plumbing alterations, rolls to the table for loading, to the sink for washing, out of the way afterward. Can be permanently installed later. Has hard-maple cutting top.

Other models include the 24-in. undercounter dishwasher and the 48-in. combination dishwasher-sink.

Eight beautiful finishes. Select from 5 beautiful colors, classic white, coppertone, or gleaming stainless steel.

The Niagara Chair is a wonderful aid to comfort and health . . . and it would, I think, be a delight to any busy executive."

not a spot! in a dishwasher full

in her electric dishwasher. Not a streak. No film or chlorine odor, either. Glasses sparkle as if hand-polished. Silverware gleams and dishes smile right back at you after a spotless cleansing with Calgonite in your dishwasher. Calgonite dissolves in a flash, washes tableware and sticky pots and pans slick as a whistle. Dishes dry without streaking or spotting. Calgonite keeps your dishwasher clean and fresh, too. All these leading electric dishwasher makers recommend Calgonite! Many include a box of Calgonite in their dishwashers: American Kitchens • Crosley General Electric • Hotpoint • Kenmore Kelvinator • Kitchen Aid • Westinghouse Youngstown Kitchens.

Thermostats are getting smaller and more effective

This is all you see in the living room.

This goes outdoors under the eaves.

This goes in the heater room—or in the kitchen if you want an extra clock.

At last somebody has tackled the job of making the thermostat on the wall less of a bulky intruder.

Shrinking its size to a handsome little dial (top picture) hasn't cost a bit in heating or cooling comfort for us. Rather than bask in its ability to start and stop the heater or air conditioner by rote, this newest thermostat has learned to anticipate on its own—and to call for the right set of actions—to beat whatever the weatherman plans to send us. This anticipator part (center picture) goes outdoors tucked out of sight under the eaves on the side from which the weather chills or scorches at its violent worst.

The only sizable remainder of the new thermostat system finds itself packed into a clock for kitchen or heater room. Set this clock—only once—and the heat goes off each night to a better sleeping temperature, back up early enough next morning to pamper you as you bathe and dress.

Everything they're wearing (yes, everything!) will be perfectly washed and dried in their Hotpoint Home Laundry

Here's the Home Laundry that's fully automatic from start to finish for all washing and drying times — all temperatures — all washable fabrics

As you can see, is a happy mother. Everything her family's wearing — from father's suit — she'll safely and beautifully wash and dry. And do it automatically in her Hotpoint Home Laundry! Into these handsome helpmates go all her own fragile what-nots. Children's play clothes and party dresses. (And what savings in hot water! Hotpoint uses 33 per cent less than most other leading automatics.) You're sure of the most delicate fabrics, because Hotpoint eliminates the day guesswork. What you wash and dry comes out bright, clean, perfectly washed, rinsed, dried at the right temperatures, in the right times. Electric blankets. Pillows. Curtains and drapes. Hotpoint washers and dryers do 'em all, spotlessly, efficiently. Next time you line up the family wash — toss it in your very own Hotpoint Automatic Laundry! Good idea?

Style-matched Pushbutton Pairs! Every Hotpoint Automatic Washer is beautifully matched with a Hotpoint Electric Dryer that automatically dries fabrics soft and fluffy. ## Living Portraits of Contemporary Artists

forever on film—another of the small miracles your 16mm projector can perform for you on home movies*

By CECILE STARR

Matisse, Braque, Picasso, Marin are names that will live permanently through their paintings, their writings and the writings of their critics. Now they live in a new way, entirely peculiar to our country, through the growing miracle of home movies.

Interestingly enough, although the motion picture is now 60 years old, it is only within the past decade that serious attention has been given to recording on film, however primitively, actual scenes of famous artists at work. Even more important, these intimate and generally unpretentious 16mm films are invaluable as living portraits of contemporary artists who all too soon will be molded, classified and solidified into the word-weary textbooks of time.

For home-movie viewers the important fact is that these little films can be rented from many local sources. (In the listing below only the names and addresses of national distributors are given.) All the films are for 16mm sound projectors; the large majority are in color, whose quality improves visibly with the passing years.

Starting with "Matisse," which was produced in 1946, we see an over-all view of the life and work of this illustrious painter, but the film's greatest value lies in its scenes of the aging, bearded artist sketching a portrait of his grandson or painting a model. Such close over-the-shoulder scenes have captured forever the marvelous skill and movement which distinguish the works of this painter and so enrich the world of art. Unfortunately the film is not in color, so that much of the vividness of the paintings is absent; but within the limitations of black-and-white photography the spirit of the man as artist is most notably present.

One interesting sequence of the film is its step-by-step evolution, in 15 stages, of a Matisse portrait of a woman. The film is 25 minutes long and available at a nominal fee from the French-American Cultural Services, 972 Fifth Avenue, New York 21, N. Y.

THE ONLY motion pictures of the American watercolorist, John Marin, are those taken, early in his film career, by the painter's friend, James Davis. In his 24-minute color film, entitled simply "John Marin," Davis reviews the elderly artist's work and contrasts it with land and sea scenes of the New York, New Jersey and Maine areas, where Marin worked.

Once again the best parts of the film are those sequences—and here they are fairly long—showing the artist as he paints. Marin's optimistic comments on life ("When we run out of cheer, where will we be?") help enliven an otherwise dull commentary, and the film is technically so amateurish that it should make the average home-movie maker feel like a veteran.

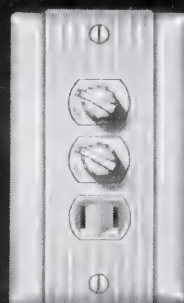

The major photographic problem is that the camera is hand-held, which means the pictures are as jerky as can be, and, even worse, the photographer made the common error of moving the camera up and down and around without a moment's rest. But these bad qualities can be borne because in the film we do get to see something of Marin and to feel that we know him somewhat. In spite of its primitiveness, the film has charm. It was produced by John Marin, Jr. and uses the recorded music of Rosalind Tureck playing Bach (Marin's favorite composer). Running time is 25 minutes, in color; rental $15, sale $170. Available from Film Images, 1860 Broadway, New York 23, New York.

A SECOND film, made up of random "out-takes" from the one above, was put together at the suggestion of Marin shortly before his death. It is even more confusing than the first film, but now has a permanent place among the invaluable documents of the age. Entitled "Pertaining to Marin," the film is ten minutes long and in color; rental is $10, sale $125. It is also available from Film Images at the address given above.

has kept alive. In "Miserere" he is photographed in connection with the printing of his impressive series of 58 black-and-white prints entitled Miserere et Guerre. Completed in 1948 after nearly 20 years of work, the series represents a summation of the artist's increasing concern about the horrors of war and the destructiveness of men. In an exceedingly well-composed film, the camera watches the elderly artist as he supervises the printing and assembling of the prints, and then it allows the pictures to speak for themselves. "Miserere" was directed by Abbé Morel, with music by Joaquin des Prés performed by the Marcel Couraud choral ensemble. The American commentary was written by Arthur Knight and narrated by Albert Dekker. Running time is 14 minutes; rental $15, sale $125. Available from Pictura Films, 487 Park Avenue, New York 22, N. Y.

AMONG the most personal and poetic of our motion picture portraits of living artists is the French film, "Georges Braque," the American version of which is circulated with commentary read by Hurd Hatfield. This original painter, of whom Matisse once said deprecatingly that his paintings seem to be made up of little cubes, has found in every object a symbol, "a mystery to be penetrated yet preserved."

Important sequences of the artist in his studio, combined with readings from his notebooks and cinematic scenes of the artist drawing on glass, make this a truly impressive film essay of a truly impressive (and photogenic) painter. The film ends with a charming sequence in which Braque selects oval stones on the Normandy beach and carves from them two simple profiles which he sets in harmoniously composed opposition.

Future generations will find true enjoyment in this record of the living men whose eye and hand, mind and heart, have been instrumental in producing and shaping so much of the art of today.

The film's running time is 17 minutes; rental $10, sale $100. Available from Film Images, 1860 Broadway, New York 23, N. Y.

an important critical review of Picasso's major periods, its strongest moments are those in which the artist is creating, however inconsequentially, in front of the camera. The scene in which Picasso draws on glass, in which we witness both the act of creation and the mobile face and form of the creator, is among the most memorable that the motion picture camera has yet achieved in the field of art.

Running time for the film is 21 minutes; rental is $12.50, sale $125. Available from Cinema Guild, 10 Fiske Place, Mount Vernon, N. Y.

A CONSIDERABLY more ambitious study of Picasso has recently been released in this country, using what the distributors tally as 477 of the artist's works to trace his amazing career from its student beginnings in 1896, through its various paths and by-ways, up to the present day. A number of Picasso's latter-day diversions with wood, charcoal and ceramic are included, but once again it is the shots of the artist, at 74 still amazingly dynamic, which most compel the eye and the imagination.

"Picasso" was produced by Italy's leading art-film director, Luciano Emmer; it was produced by Sergio Amidei, one of the leading Italian scenarists, who together with Picasso is credited as writer for this film. My only complaint about the film is that its commentary is overbearing and out of tune with the things it is speaking about. Original music was composed by Roman Vlad. The film runs a full 50 minutes and is in color of excellent quality. For 16mm and 35mm rental rates, apply to Contemporary Films, 13 East 37th Street, New York 16, N. Y.

Another colorful artist whom the motion picture has recorded at work and at home is the Chinese-American painter Dong Kingman, photographed in the film "Dong Kingman" by the noted Hollywood cameraman, James Wong Howe. The film shows the detailed creation of a watercolor street scene made in New York's Chinatown and, in its second section, goes home with the artist to meet his family and take a close look at some of his work.

The spirit of the film keeps it from being merely a superficial record of everyday events. Chinese music is used as background accompaniment; the commentary was written by Tom Prideaux.

Running time is 15 minutes; the film is in color. Rental $15, sale $175. Available from Contemporary Films, 13 East 37th Street, New York 16, N. Y.

LIVING PORTRAITS OF CONTEMPORARY ARTISTS

As a photographic study the film "Mark Tobey: Artist" has many commendable qualities. Particularly praiseworthy is its sheer pictorial beauty in such shots as those contrasting the Seattle artist's dull-hued pattern-conscious paintings with moving pictures of the mundane scenes from which he selects his subjects. The artist himself is charming to meet—handsome, gray-haired, bearded. The film's commentary is incredibly poor—at times pompous, at times ridiculous. Music, composed by Tobey together with Cecil Young, is far more expressive than the words that accompany the film. Written and directed by Robert G. Gardner, photographed by William Heick, the film runs 20 minutes and is in color. Rental is $12.50, sale $225. Available from Brandon Films, 200 West 57th Street, New York 19, N. Y.

THE MODERN American primitive painter, known far and wide as Grandma Moses, has also been immortalized on film in a production photographed in 1950, when she was ninety years old. An outline of her remarkable career as a painter is presented. Of her style she says, "I paint down—first the sky, then the trees and then the ground." Scenes from the family album show her great-great-grandmother, herself as a child and a young wife. The final sequences of "Grandma Moses" explore some of her canvases in detail, with a delightful musical accompaniment by Hugh Martin, orchestrated by Alec Wilder, in the background.

Running time is 22 minutes, in Kodachrome. Rental $20, sale $200. Available from Film Images, 1860 Broadway, New York 23, N. Y.

BECAUSE of the painter's drip-and-dribble approach to his canvas, the film "Jackson Pollock" is perhaps the most entertaining, perhaps the most hilarious, of the lot. The camera shows him standing over the large surface to be painted, which he has placed flat on the ground, dripping and splattering it with streaks of bright color, with sprinklings of pebbles, sand, string, nails and other matter thrown in for good measure.

In one sequence, the painter works on clear glass, photographed from below. Pollock himself narrates a first-person commentary, (Please turn to page 253)

AVISCO®

AVISCO
INTEGRITY TAG

Richer color for your bedroom — and less linting

AVISCO is the reason

The chief charms of this beautiful bedspread—its warm coloring and its virtual freedom from lint—come from the Avisco rayon fibers that are woven all through it, and that form the rich, thick, velvety coin dots and border.

No other fiber gives you quite such luxurious color depth. No other fiber gives you such practical freedom from the annoyance of linting.

And no guarantee gives you quite such assurance as the Avisco Integrity Tag attached to every spread. It backs up the quality with countless tests, from basic fiber to the beauty on your bed. (Those tests include washing, too.)

Ask for Cabin Crafts spreads with the Avisco Integrity Tag. Eleven Woodland tones, single size about $15.95; draperies about $12.95.

which explains his methods and aims. His recent tragic death makes it all the more important to see how he worked.

Directors Paul Falkenberg and Hans Namuth have done the photographic honors with unusual clarity and good taste. Running time is 11 minutes, in Kodachrome. Rental is $7.50, sale $100. From Film Images, address above.

"Karl Knaths' Cape Cod" is an informal comparison of this Provincetown painter's work (some 35 canvases) with actual scenes of what he sees when he goes fishing, clamming, duck hunting and the like. Aside from presenting an enjoyable personality, the film quietly observes and reveals a number of important concepts about the painter's relationship to his material.

The film was produced and photographed by Jack Calderwood. Running time is 14 minutes; the film is in color. Rental is $15, sale $150. Available from Docufilms, 209 East 66th Street, New York 21, N. Y.

ALTHOUGH it has many serious faults (the color quality is disturbingly uneven for one thing), the Canadian film "Varley" seems to me to give more information and feeling about a painter and his work than any other film I have seen. Now in his seventies, Frederick Varley has never been a fashionable painter, we are told; his work and his life have been burdened with periods of despair and inactivity. The film is not an attempt to make him popular or even understood; it is merely a portrait of a living artist and his devotion to his work.

The film was produced for the National Film Board of Canada by Thomas Daly; directed by Allan Wargon. photographed by Denis Gillson, with music by Louis Applebaum. Running time is 16 minutes, in color. Rental $6, sale $150. Available from the International Film Bureau, 57 E. Jackson Blvd., Chicago 4, Ill.

Farther from home, "Korean Artist" introduces the contemporary painter Lee Hyung Pyo, demonstrating his personal style as an outgrowth of his country's traditional style and the modern mode, which now more or less dominates the entire world of art. The film, produced and directed by Ted Conant, is 14 minutes long, in color. Rental is $15, sale $150. A similarly remote study is to be found in "Namatjira, the Painter," showing the natural scenery of the Australian outback and the watercolors produced by this well-known aborigine painter. A production of the Australian National Film Board, the film is 20 minutes long, in color. Rental is $20, sale $200. Both films are available from Film Images, 1860 Broadway, N.Y.C.

"Sumi Artist" shows the Japanese artist Chiura Obata as he creates pictures in traditional style, using jet-black pigment and "natural" colors, and sitting cross-legged on the floor in typical Japanese dress. Although possibly intended as an instructional film, it is a fascinating close-range view of a precise and delicate style of painting. I recommend it to any audience. Running time is ten minutes, in color. Prints are available for purchase (at $115) from Lobett Productions, 2002 Taraval Street, San Francisco 16, California. For rentals write the producer and ask the name and address of educational film libraries that own the film.

"Color Lithography, an Art Medium" is another instructional film which transcends its inherent boundaries and becomes an enjoyable experience for even the casual viewer. It shows the step-by-step development of a three-color lithograph by Reginald H. Neal, art instructor at the University of Mississippi. Directed by Duncan Whiteside, this is the first film production of the university and one of which it might well be proud. The film won this year's Golden Reel award in the art category and is 32 minutes long, in color. Rental is $22.50, sale $225. Available from the Department of Television, Film and Radio, University Extension, University of Mississippi, University, Mississippi.

FROM Maine to Mississippi, from France to Korea, the world of art and artists moves closer to all of us, by means of the motion picture. On 16mm film, these "living" artists now come into your home. And this, I believe, is only the beginning of the wonderful things that will happen in this newest trend in art and cinema.

She cleans twice a week

BUT— still her house
is dirty!

Here's a meticulous lady who cleans her home from top to bottom not once, but twice a week. And still she can't keep up with the fine dirt that settles tenaciously on walls, woodwork, rugs, curtains, drapes and furniture to give them that gray, tired look.

Each time she removes these fine dirt particles, replacements pour in—right through the conventional filters in the warm air heating or air conditioning system. What she needs is help in the form of PLIOTRON—the world's first, fully washable electrostatic air filter.

Much as a magnet captures bits of iron, the special filter medium in PLIOTRON attracts and captures up to five times as much fine dirt as ordinary filters. And PLIOTRON depth-loads rather than surface-loads for greater capacity. Best of all, when finally dirty, PLIOTRON is easily restored to like-new efficiency by a quick bath.

Cost? PLIOTRON does cost more than "throwaway" filters, but first cost is its only cost. And the difference is much more than made up by savings in filter costs, cleaning and decorating bills and reduced maintenance, most of which can be traced to faulty filters.

Why not get more information, today, on cleaner, healthier air at lower cost with PLIOTRON? See your heating and ventilating dealer. Or write Goodyear, P.O. Box 288, Akron, Ohio.

MEMO to a MODERN EPICURE

by Poppy Cannon

Model Fingers

This is the name given to small, finger-shaped sandwiches of pound cake put together with Tasti-Diet sucaryl sweetened preserves. It's a tidbit, quite popular with the models of Manhattan, whose figures are their fortune. As for the pound cake, likely as not it's Sara Lee's—frozen, ready to thaw and slice, or it's made from the Dromedary pound cake mix inspired by and still true to Williamsburg traditions. All three, the Tasti-Diet line jellies, jams, puddings and dressings; the frozen pound cake and Dromedary mix are widely distributed in chain stores as well as in independent markets.

A pretty addendum to the usual bar accessories is a squat apothecary jar made by Ceraglass with identification label, Sugar, blazoned across the front in blue and 22-carat pure gold. Available at gift shops and department stores all over the country.

MARILYN HAFNER

This may surprise you, but it's true, that many a meringue, soufflé and delicate cake has been literally knocked flat by too-coarse sugar. That's why some particular cooks are using for all purposes, the new instant superfine sugar instead of granulated. Superfine, variously known as fruit and berry, iced tea or bar sugar, should not be confused with confectioner's sugar which is even finer, contains some corn starch, and is generally used for uncooked frostings, icings and various candies.

Times Do Change

There was a day when, if you really cared, you took the trouble to provide a simple syrup for sweetening all manner of drinks. There was no other way to be sure that a sodden shield of sugar would not lie sluggardly at the bottom of the glass. Now even the most meticulous admit that simple syrup is a thing of the past. Domino's instant superfine sugar does exactly what its name implies. In a moment it is dissolved, even in an iced beverage, even in a cocktail.

Homemade Bread Mix

At long, long last—a mix we have been dreaming about. real old-fashioned homemade bread. Truly revolutionary! You add nothing but water. Takes no more than ten minutes to put together. Goes directly into the oven to rise and to bake. Ready for the table within an hour. All chain stores should have it—if not now, soon! It's Appian Way Qwik Bread, put up by the originators of Pizza Mix and Sauce.

Each carton contains the makings of two big loaves—two packets of bread mix and dry yeast, one aluminum bake pan.

Why not two pans? Or are you expected to bake only one loaf at a time?

There is also an envelope of cinnamon and sugar. A good idea. Also one of garlic powder which we didn't like too much. Could be we are just a little weary of garlic bread!

But why be captious? This bread mix is real news. Hours are eliminated along with multiple "risings." The dough blooms into bread in a very slow oven and then bakes at the regular bread temperature, about 400 degrees F. Comparable to the best bread you can buy, even when it's made with water, the loaves take on added flavor if you use milk or half milk and half cream.

Should you have trouble finding Appian Way Qwik Bread at your market, write to Food Specialties Inc., Worcester, Mass., or San Jose, California.

Idea Book

Can it be that a new era has dawned for manufacturers' booklets—with the advent of "Creative Cooking," produced under the direction of Procter & Gamble with the editorial assistance of Ann Seranne and Eileen Gaden? Dedicated to the numerous virtues of Fluffo, the golden shortening, the book is a small (well, not so small—108 pages) treasury of excellent recipes. Even more important, it's full of bright thoughts. The pictures particularly are worth studying. How proudly a Hungarian coffee cake stands on a footed compotier of Chinese basketry which performs a double service, makes an airy rack for cooling, as well as a distinctive serving piece.

On the same page, a Kugelhopf rests on a Japanese pie basket turned upside down. The classic combination, melon balls and ham, are shown on skewers speared into a melon half. On other pages a broad-based crystal vase, a wide-mouth sherbet and an up-turned goblet are topped with glass plates to hold a variety of cakes.

Fostoria sherbets and clear glass plates in three sizes form a sumptuous tier for tarts and pie-lets and a rum cream fruit tart bulgy with apricots under glaze, rests on a shimmering crystal dais which is no more than a plain glass plate balanced on top of a candlestick set up-side down.

In building these glass edifices, no adhesive is necessary, no wetting of the edges. Balance does it and many Fostoria glasses seem to be particularly suitable.

Still Life for Curry

Temples of Thailand or Cambodia must have inspired the table setting for the curry buffet. Cassava melon is winged on either side with hands of bananas. Persimmons are ranged in the front be viewed from both sides). On top of the melon a grapefruit is set upon a sturdy skewer. Above rises a tower of oranges or tangerines and lemons graduating from large to very small. Kumquats make a crest across the top of the melon and crown the grapefruit. As the spire rises, green grapes circle.

Instead of persimmons, red apples could be used; red grapes in place of kumquats.

Edible Napkin Rings

Practically all the decorations on the table are eatable even the napkin rings shaped from sweet yeast dough. Don't tell the Fluffo people, but we used oven-ready biscuits rolling and flattening them till each piece was nine inches long, about two inches wide, and 1/4 inch thick. We tapered one end, cut a gash at the other end, wrapped the strips around several thicknesses of aluminum foil leaving as much room as a napkin would require. The tapered end is pulled through the gash. Bake as usual.

Dramatic Buffet Breads

In this same book, wafers much like Armenian Lavash are shown piled high on a wooden skewer for a teen-age buffet. Once again, instead of sweet yeast dough, oven-ready biscuits will do. Divide each biscuit in two parts, shape into balls, roll each ball into discs thin as paper, seven or eight inches in diameter, bake at 425° F., six to eight minutes or until lightly brown. Or, may we add, to accompany a Mexican or Spanish specialty, transform the same discs into sopapillas by dropping them into your automatic deep fryer (with Fluffo, perforce!). Fry two or three minutes at 370° F., or until lightly tanned. Drain on paper towels.

Plus One Label

Creative Cooking is not hard to come by. Send fifty cents and one label from a can of Fluffo, the golden shortening, to Procter & Gamble, Dept. H., P.O. Box 837, Cincinnati, Ohio. Just mention the name of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL and you'll get it promptly.

days when Romanesque sculptors were assaulting, with their own wit and audacity, their own society's conventional subjects.

I won't go into the question of what some of our modern forms mean, partly because I don't know, but largely because I don't much care. In fact, what I like best about them is their lack of any specific prose message. They don't say something; they are something. In this respect they are like the forms of Chinese vases or the movements of classical ballet; what they give us is not "meaning," but significance.

The shapes in a Braque still life are magically quiet. They do not even murmur, as do the dishes and glasses of an old Dutch master, that someone has just left the table. The massive slabs in a seascape by the late Nicolas de Staël, perhaps the best new painter since the war, do not orate, as do the waves of Winslow Homer, about the life of mariners. There is in modern pictures, in spite of the wit I have mentioned, a noble reserve, a fastidious refusal to gossip or moralize. They are, in their own way, as silent as the proportions of Greek temples.

They are also, as a rule, more noticeably colored than our old masterpieces. Ask a friend, just back from Paris, to enumerate the colors in the Mona Lisa. He will pause; he probably spent most of his time looking at that smile and didn't see the painting. Ask him, however, for the colors in a Matisse and he will start right off with red, green, yellow, blue. Of course, I'm not being fair, since the Mona Lisa badly needs scrubbing. But you can try the experiment with a clean Rubens or Fragonard and get about the same result.

NOT THAT the old masters didn't use color. Take an extreme example—scarcely a masterpiece—as an explanation. Can you think of Washington crossing the Delaware in color? No, because the well-known picture of that event is all heroic subject. It scarcely exists as painting. It is rather a national document, and like all documents it grays in our imagination.

Modern pictures have very little documentary value, and we may feel that that's a pity. Yet we ought to remember the gain. A yellow boat by Matisse doesn't have to worry about battles or even crossing a river. It doesn't pretend to be anything except a patch of paint which has assumed the form of a boat. It is therefore free, within the harmony imposed by its neighboring reds, greens and blues, to call our attention to yellow.

Similar comments could be made about tonality, light and the pictorial stuff itself: pigments, oil, varnish and canvas. Abstract artists are especially free to bring out the raw beauty of their materials. We don't—as we do with a Van Eyck—look through a Pollock, as though it were a window, at a subject in conventional perspective back of the frame. There is no subject, and the perspective is aerial, not theatrical. So we look at the flat stuff itself. It's like discovering the quality of earth from a plane.

All the traditional elements of painting have thus been liberated, both in fact and in our awareness, from a dependence grown particularly dull and wintry in the academies of the last century. Flip through the reproductions in a history of art, and you will have a strong impression of springtime when you turn into the modern period.

But wait. Forget about the academics. Aren't the real old masters full of "modern" virtues, if we would only stop concentrating on their subjects and look at their painting? Can't our springtime be made retroactive? It can. One of the great things about the pleasures of modern painting is the fact that it is, unlike, say, the pleasures of the Italian Renaissance, always extendible in time and space.

A man who admires Raphael may not enjoy Matisse, but a man who has learned to admire Matisse is in good shape to enjoy Raphael, and Japanese prints and Persian miniatures as well. The pleasures of modern painting are less bigoted, more universal, than the pleasures attached to subject matter. They are, when purged of their occasional snobbery and silliness, morally superior.

THEIR very universality, however, poses a curious problem. We may agree that the modern movement has been a necessary corrective. Eighty years ago most painters and all of the general public needed to be reminded very sharply that painting was not, after all, a branch of literature. But now we have learned the lesson, and we have just admitted that the old masters combined literary content with pure painting. Why, then, continue the demonstration? Isn't it high time we stopped this puritanical rejection of subject matter, and returned to a more human compromise?

Well, of course there has been some compromise all along. To make my point I have rather exaggerated this report on the demise of the subject. There is more than pure painting in many modern pictures. Picasso and Klee have depicted grins every bit as bewitching as Mona Lisa's—or the Cheshire cat's. Ninety per cent of Salvador Dali's appeal springs from his subject matter. And today many young artists are soberly applying themselves to the task of interpreting and describing nature.

But I realize that these concessions do not get me off the hook. One can't legitimately defend modern painting by pointing out that much of it is not really so very modern. Strictly speaking, Dali is just a sixteenth-century Mannerist with some new themes. His painting style is thoroughly traditional, even academic.

And today the abstract movement has grown too large to be ignored. A large number of young artists appear determined to eliminate subject matter from painting once for all, and thus carry to its logical conclusion an idea which their precursors were willing to drop at the halfway point. How can we justify this rigorism?

The defense has three standard arguments. In the first place, the abstractionists say, most of the conventional subjects for painting have been used up. Anecdotes, historical events, portraits, still lifes, nudes and landscapes have been done and done and done. We have them by the millions in our museums, books, prints and private collections. They are wonderful. But why do them all over again? Trying to paint another Mona Lisa is as presumptuous as trying to create another Hamlet. And as pointless. We've got one.

IF YOU start to reply that the number of possible variations is infinite in a human smile, or even in a coffee pot, and that therefore our supply of pictorial subjects can never be exhausted, the abstractionists are ready with their second argument. Anyway, they say, shifting their ground slightly, all these subjects can be handled better by photographers.

Only a lingering, anachronistic, pseudo-aristocratic prejudice against gadgets keeps us from seeing, they say, that a sensitive artist with a camera can beat any painter at portraiture. And if Washington were to cross the Delaware today we could have a photograph which would make the painting we have look like a piece of pompous, theatrical flummery. And why should painters turn out frozen dramas and anecdotes for homes equipped with television sets? In an age of specialists, painters should be painters, not second-rate photographers.

If you start to object that a painter can be a sort of photographer and at the same time an excellent painter, you get the third argument of the abstractionists. No, they say, for even a slight emphasis on subject matter not only tends to distract the viewer from the painterly qualities of a picture, it also actually shrinks the significance.

This, it seems to me, is a very interesting point. It is not, you will note, the old formalistic plea for art for art's sake. It is a plea for more, not less, significance. And it suggests that abstraction is not merely another school or style in the series known collectively as the modern movement, but in fact a new art, or at least a very new kind of painting—which would explain why our young abstractionists are so excited.

A thorough analysis of the point would take us far into pure esthetic theory, but I will venture an imperfect analogy with music. If Beethoven had been required to "imitate nature" in his Fifth Symphony, to introduce, say, even some slight allusions to battle sounds, wouldn't the significance of the work have been shrunk to that extent? Isn't Tchaikovsky sometimes an inferior artist for precisely that reason? And wouldn't Mozart's music be terribly diminished if it suggested, say, the songs of birds instead of all the ironic tenderness and the thousand other undefinable things it does in fact signify?

COLOR and abstract forms do not, to be sure, yet have the evocative power for most of us that abstract sound has. Nor would I agree that the arguments I have cited are enough to destroy the case for old-fashioned subject painting. Our pleasures in that kind of art are now several thousand years old, and they are much too real to be dimmed by a mere theory. They certainly have a long future.

But I do think that these arguments are strong enough to justify the parallel development of abstract painting. Moreover, they are apt to become stronger as the years pass, as the camera takes over more and more of our pictorial subject matter, we become more and more accustomed to pure painting, and our abstractionists become more and more expert in their new art.

TIME TO TAKE A NEW LOOK AT CALIFORNIA WINES

make you aware of differences in color, sparkle, aroma and that curious and subtle transformation of fruit fragrance into something quite different and almost inexpressible—the mellow wine smell which is known as bottle bouquet.

When you taste one wine against another throughout a meal, you become well acquainted with both of them. You open yourself to their separate charms. You discover which one has a special appeal to you, which one lures you back to it. It is a very different experience from a wine-tasting where you form your judgment on only a sniff and a sip.

Actually it is unfair to compare the wines of two continents, even though both are made from the same grape stock and by similar methods.

The soils are different. The sun hours are radically different; so are the rain-fall and the mists and the dew. Even though they have the same parents, the character of the grape changes. The Grey Riesling yields in California a wine quite different from that of its counterpart, the Chauché gris of France. The Folle blanche grape, originally from Charente, makes the world's greatest brandy, but a poor drinking wine in its own land, while in California it is dry and fresh with a lovely, fruity, tart quality, pure and clean to the nose and palate.

Nevertheless, since most of us learn first about European wine types, it is necessary to have some sort of translation from French to American. Remember, we are not talking about twins, prototypes or reasonable facsimiles. These are family resemblances.

If you're thinking of clarets, the English word for red Bordeaux, the California equivalent is Cabernet Sauvignon. Sometimes it is called merely Cabernet.

If your mind is on Burgundy, California's Pinot Noir is the wine for you. For the Beaujolais type, try a Gamay Beaujolais or just Gamay. Or even a red Pinot may be what you want.

For a red wine with an Italian accent, like Chianti, ask for a Barbera or try a typical California blend known as Vino Rosso or a Grignolino.

California Zinfandel varies widely, but generally it falls somewhere between a claret and a Burgundy in a class of its own.

Among the white wines the Sau-ternes, Graves and White Bordeaux find their counterparts in the California wines carrying the names of the grapes which are used in both countries, like Sauvignon Blanc and Semillon. A sweet Sauterne is quite similar to a Sweet Semillon.

A Chablis or white Burgundy will have for its closest California kinsman a Pinot Chardonnay (the best!) or more distantly related—a Folle Blanche, preferably a Mountain Folle Blanche or a Pinot Blanc.

The Rhine wines, Moselles and Hocks, become in California a Riesling, Johannesberg Riesling, Grey Riesling, Traminer or Sylvaner.

To pair with a French rosé wine, you would choose a Gamay Rosé, Grenache Rosé or Grignolino Rosé.

The Taste Testing at Dinner

Most wine glasses, you'll find, are too small. A footed water tumbler is often the best glass in the house for red or white wine or champagne. Right now the best seller at Baccarat is an outsize Burgundy glass which is used for all wines. (See page 194.) Your glass should hold at least 8 ounces, but you pour into it only 4 ounces. You will have a better appreciation of the bouquet if the glass is slightly narrower at the top to enclose the aromas and hold them fast for the delight of your nose. It goes without saying that any decoration or color in the glass will be a distraction.

First you will look at your wine. A purplish tint often denotes a young red wine. A tint of brown is a mark of maturity. The wine should be bright and clear when held to the light, but contrary to the popular American concept, sediment is not necessarily a defect. It is a characteristic of some of the greatest and mellowest Burgundies of France. Many experts believe that we in America are interfering with the quality and aging of some of our wines by over insistence on clarity and brightness.

After the eyes have seen, the nose takes over. There are, it seems, two levels of fragrance. An essentially fruity, flowery or spicy aroma blends somehow with an overtone that can only be described as mellow and winy. This is bouquet. It is easily recognizable and very difficult to describe.

Then comes the taste. Probably you will not want to gurgle and slurp like a professional wine taster. All that is necessary is to fill your mouth with the wine to let it come in contact with all the taste buds. For each section of the mouth and tongue is physiologically attuned to different qualities. At last you swallow. In spite of much wine hokum, this is the ultimate test. For the throat also has its sensation, and the after-taste glows there as on the tongue.

Perhaps after you have made a number of these tests, you will be able to spot the import every time. You will find the Rhine wines of Germany sweeter than their California counterparts, for sugar is often added, especially in the last few years, a practice illegal in California. You may decide, too, as have many experts, that the famous estate bottled wines of France have a richer body, a more enveloping bouquet. They leave a more lingering impression on the palate. Or again you may prefer, along with many other Americans, the lightness, the brightness, the refreshing elegance of our own "highly polished" California wines. Who is to say? Only you.

Adventurous You

In comparing the wine making and wine makers of California with their European prototypes, one thing becomes apparent. In Europe everything is known. All avenues have been explored. Ancient knowledge and traditions hang like a romantic but indispensible miasma, almost like a delicate fog muffling the minds of men, slowing them down, holding them in gentle thrall. No surprises. No momentous failures. But in California one senses immediately that the great adventure still exists. There is exploration and discovery ahead—not only for the maker, but for the wine-lover.

Some Guides

Nevertheless, in trying to reach a valid decision, you must know what to look for among the California wines.

The red wines should have a certain amount of acidity which gives a tingle to the tongue; they should be free of any over-ripe grape or raisin character. If it's a California Cabernet, it should be really dry, not in the least bit sweet. The distinctive taste of the Cabernet grapes should be recognizable, but it should have been transmuted by mellowing in wood and bottle.

A Mountain Zinfandel, on the other hand, needs less of the taste of age, and the fruity aroma may well be more pronounced; it is less subtle, more rugged—exciting is the word.

A Pinot Noir, cousin to the Burgundies, is mainly distinguishable because of its softness and smoothness, its velvety quality. Not so much sting on the tongue, and the brightness may, in the best of Pinots, show a soft overcast of brown. Red or Black Pinots are obviously lesser wines. They may be interesting and in some cases even delightful, but they will not give that impression of depth and texture.

Barbera, being an Italian grape, has many of the characteristics of Italian wines, including a good deal of acid.

The California Gamay is reminiscent of the Beaujolais wines in France, light, bright, refreshing.

Among the white table wines, you must be sure that there is no trace of a woody or oak taste, no touch of amber in the color, and none of the sharp fumes that indicate the presence of too much sulphur dioxide. (You feel this first in your nostrils.)

The prima donna of all the California whites is the Pinot Chardonnay, a grape from which the greatest of the French white Burgundies are made. The color may be straw pale to light golden, but there must be a certain unmistakable pungency.

The California Johannesburg Riesling, when at its best, has a slight greenish tinge; it is fruity and at the same time rather tart; more fruity than the Grey Riesling and less full bodied.

Once you have tasted the best Traminers or Gewurtz Traminers of California, you will never forget them. Gewurtz Traminers have a spicy after-taste almost like cinnamon and a clinging quality on the tongue that comes when you have eaten a muscat grape with its skin.

As for the Rosés of California, there are many people in Europe and in the United States who insist that California has an edge over imported Rosé wines, when you drink them here in the United States. This advantage is mostly geographical. Rosé wines do not need, in fact they cannot take, aging. Freshness is their charm.

The Grenache grape is perhaps the leading variety used for Rosé wines. There was a time only a few years ago when this grape, along with the Zinfandel, was scorned, because it was so widespread and productive. Certainly it has undergone many refinements, and so has the production of the wine. A Rosé is not a subtle wine. Its charms are obvious. It should be pink and pretty; a bright clear hue is generally preferable. There may be a note of orange color, but no brown.

A Grignolino, which is a type of Rosé wine, may, on the other hand, vary in color from orange red to medium red, and is sometimes almost as dark as a claret. But unlike the Rosé, made of Grenache grapes, this wine should be mellowed long enough to remove some of its natural astringency.

*Three hours plus saw,

Buy a sheet of  $\frac{3}{4}$ " plywood 3'x8' in the water-proof grade. Bind it neatly on the underside with  $\frac{3}{4}$ "x1 $\frac{1}{2}$ " strips of white oak. (Have your lumber dealer rip this for you from the standard  $\frac{3}{4}$ "x3" he sells as stair nosing.) Make guides from same kind of stock to hold sawhorse legs in place.

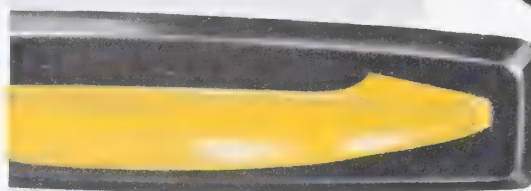

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

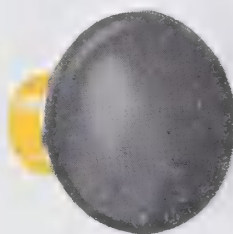

Make the sawhorse from 2x3's, cut to length you prefer for table height. Finish all lumber with penetrating-type of natural finish. Stay away from the glossy surface-sealing finishes; they quickly chip, letting water seep in—which leads to an unattractive blackening of the wood.

A Perfect Pass-through

PHOTOGRAPHS BY ROBERT C. CLEVELAND

Here is a pass-through from kitchen to screened-in terrace-porch which is a well-nigh perfect solution for many needs. It can be closed off at night or in wintertime by means of folding glass windows which let light into the kitchen, even when closed. It performs the basic function of facilitating service to the outdoor area. It also acts as a luncheon bar. Shelving, too, (left) is accessible from both sides of the pass-through; it can be loaded from the kitchen side and used from the outside. The design by architect Paul Hoag is beautifully integrated into the architecture of the house.

A new thing in '56 —the inconspicuous light switch

"Tap-Lite," a new, noiseless, non-obvious switch plate, has a clear plastic casing into which you can fit wallpaper or painted paper to match surrounding walls. Wallpaper from Murals, Inc.

A switch plate that blends inconspicuously into the background of the wall in which it is installed has long been a crying need—and here it is at long last. It is a trim, uncomplicated fixture called "Tap-Lite," ingeniously designed by Henry Dreyfuss for the Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Company. It's a matter of a Plexiglas sheet and a single round gilt button, designed so that inserts of matching wallpaper or wall paint can be slipped behind the clear Plexiglas, and you're hardly aware of the plastic covering. The small gilt button is the only evidence that a switch plate is there.

And that's a change from the usual obvious battery of finger-smudged plates and buttons. The clear plastic, of course, can be easily kept clean.

The plate itself snaps into the wall on a spring-type clip, so that there are no troublesome screws to indicate how it has been attached.

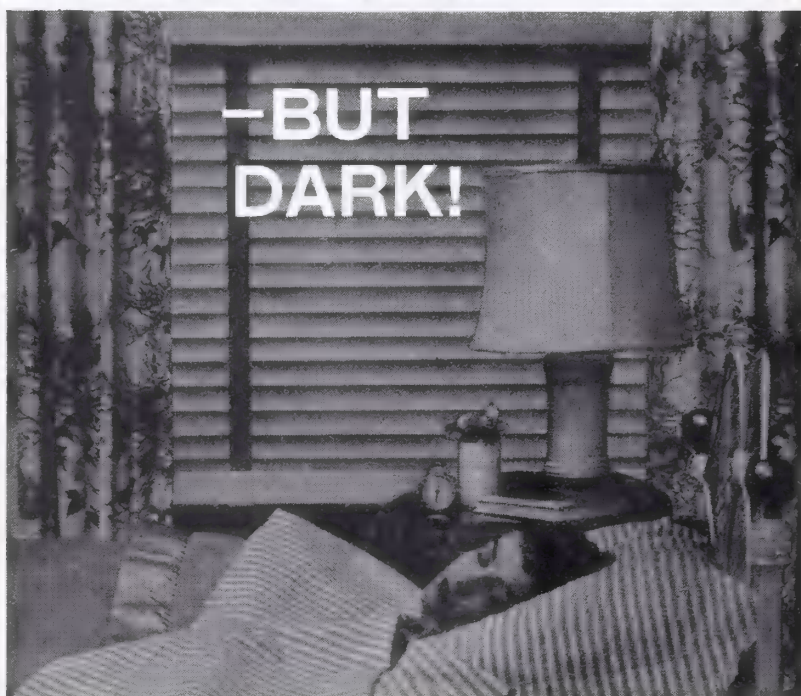

But there's an extra special bonus here, too. That pretty gilt actuator button does a solo job, switching lights both on and off. It works noiselessly and, because the button is dome-shaped and responds to a touch, you could even work the switch with your elbow, if your hands were occupied.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILLIAM HOWLAND

A gold button here turns lights on or off at a touch. Works on normal household current, needs no special wiring, comes for one, two or three buttons. Cost, about $2 up.

just anyone's house, more than a structure with bare walls and bare floors occupied for the moment by people without possessions or pursuits. Is this not a description of a cliché modern house tenanted by those who are fearful of adding anything that might disturb the blank-wall simplicity of the box-like architecture?

Unfortunately the same caution has crept into other houses in one form or another: cubist furniture with surfaces as plain as the plaster walls they find themselves against; a clinical décor that makes even an open book look terribly disorderly, not to mention a relaxed human being; an emptiness, in fact, that verges on the vacuous.

In driving toward simplicity many modernists made elimination the greatest virtue. Pulls and other hardware were made to disappear so as not to "break" the line or surface of a door or piece of furniture. Thus not only ornament tended to disappear, but frequently even function itself disappeared, since doors and drawers were difficult to open.

Now hardware is counting again. It does its job with efficiency and with delight. The new hardware functions well and handles easily, and it makes a pattern that is a pleasure in itself. (Many examples are shown in connection with this article. Note how striking they are even out of context. They are more striking in their proper place.)

But the new romantic movement does not stop at making functional forms and useful objects more beautiful; it explores every surface for ways to enrich it without, of course, disfiguring it with the unappropriate, the florid, the gimcrackery of several generations ago.

A little enrichment, these days goes a long way, as the examples on pages 182 and 183 show. Often a single bold ornament—a carving above the door, a large-scaled escutcheon, an intricately worked pull—counts for far more than many small ones, which sometimes tend to cancel each other out.

At the same time, these decorative touches highlight and bring out by contrast the less noticeable richness of grain and texture of the material forming their background; for instance, the wood of the doors, the wall-covering of grass cloth.

So there is no blindness in the contemporary revolt against blank plain surfaces, in the current hunger for enrichment, in the natural urge to fill the vacuum created by modernism. It is not a return to Victorianism and ornateness. It is a movement forward to a new kind of beauty proper to our time and circumstances, but above all free and embracing, courageous, enthusiastic and alive. It has brought a breath of life not only to our plain surfaces, but to every corner of our homes.

Other antique "hikite" set in sliding doors show how intricate details can be enjoyed without creating distraction to the general scene, for over-all effect of each is quiet. They make a charming little feature out of a necessity.

Some lock manufacturers now sell decorative escutcheons, installed between the lock set and the door panel, by which you can add colorful interest to an otherwise plain door. These, by the Schlage Lock Co., come in all standard metal finishes and are provided with a template from which you can cut the decorative underlay inserts from any flat sheet material such as metal, moisture resistant wall-paper, cork or plastic.

THE ENRICHMENT OF PLAIN SURFACES

Heavy, bold door pulls of Mexican silver inlaid with blue lapis and green malachite are actually in the class of jewelry. Their role as enrichers is undeniable. Imported by Decorator William Parker McFadden.

This stylized chestnut leaf and flower in etched bronze was probably originally the emblem of one of the noble houses of Japan. Architect Albert Ives featured it as a decorative terminal on the framing of a doorway.

3 PICTURES BY MAYNARD PARKER

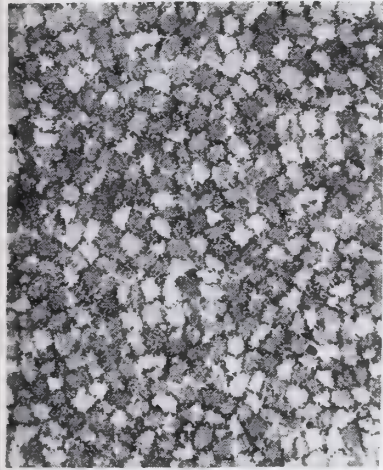

An antique drawer-pull from Japan, representing a highly stylized bat, was used to embellish a series of built-in drawers executed in the modern architectural idiom. Albert Ives, again, was the architect.

smooth-weave cotton antique satin, which combines brown, gray and black.

All of the weaves are yarn-dyed cotton or combinations of cotton and rayon. 54 inches wide, and are of weights that might be used interchangeably for draperies, upholstery or slipcovers. Appropriately enough, they call this pre-matched line "Quartet."

Carpet mosaic

Hadn't stopped to think until Helen Jensen pointed it out that constant entertaining can be even tougher on a living-room carpet than a houseful of children. The childless but chronically hospitable Jensens in three years' time have gone through one pearl gray velvet and have pretty nearly finished off a two-tone beige twist. It isn't that the rugs actually wear out, but the constant cleaning up of spills and footmarks has made the rugs too tired-looking for beauty.

Helen's problem is furniture that's a little too dressy for such standard soil-camouflagers as random weaves and all-over florals. Moreover, her colors are rather restrained beiges that verge on gray and vice versa, so that a mad mess of color is hardly the solution.

To our mutual delight we have found the answer in one of Firth's "Tuftwoven" classic all-wool broadlooms. It's a pattern reminiscent of close-packed pebbles in a curious mingling of gray and beige which is called "Byzantine Mosaic." It's practically a made-to-order soil-swallower for the urbane Jensen living room and the gregarious life it leads, and is peculiarly appropriate because it echoes the beige monotones of their new mosaic table top. It comes in widths from 27 inches to 15 feet.

Went over to Richard Sherrill's to have a few words about the "Wonderbrass" treatment which coats his entire line of brass and keeps all those bedsteads, tables, coat racks, umbrella stands, mirrors and what-not from losing their brilliance. But I got sidetracked almost at once by an amusing new development I saw over there—a gleaming brass shaving stand, 70" high, equipped with an adjustable oval mirror, a brass-galleried plastic soap dish and a round black Carrara glass table surface. Just the thing, I thought, for Frank Garfield, a man-in-the-gray-flannel-suit who could put this to excellent use in his new dressing room, for it's exactly the setup for modern electric-razor shaving. Soap dish holds razor, talcum, and sweet-smelling stuff, the mirror frames the face, and the table top is an ideal spot for the nightly turning out of pockets—holding keys, coins, and oddments. Takes practically no floor space either.

Shade and Shelter for camping out

the wind that so often spoil the pleasure of a favorite camp site*

The materials to buy are simple—plastic clothesline, rough lumber and strips of awning canvas stitched three-wide for the roof and backdrop. More canvas is stitched to form a "bag" which, when leaf-filled, makes a comfortable mattress. Use 2" x 6"'s for mattress frame and 2" x 2"'s for shelter frame.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

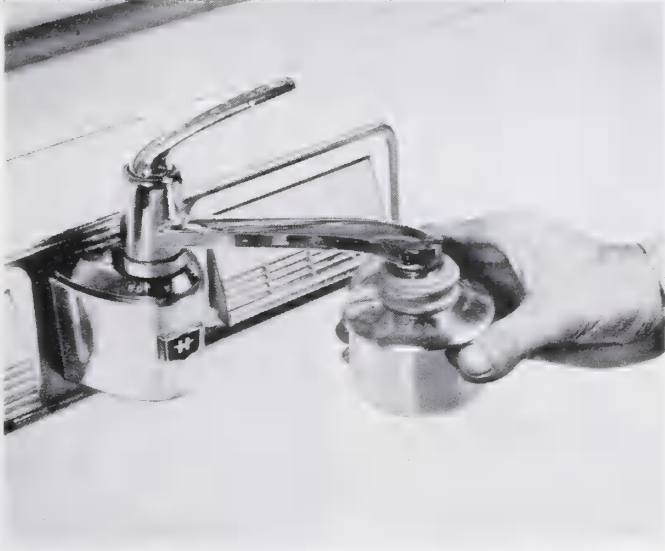

Drill quarter-inch holes two inches on center to lace clothesline through and form mattress base. Set tent poles free of mattress base, thus eliminating vibration from wind, and brace with clothesline. Connect wood members together with galvanized or brass fastenings which will eliminate rust problem.

For painting or grubby cleaning tasks, Poppins Scrubbers beat any household glove we know. Fashioned of fine cotton jersey finished on outside with rugged, moisture-resistant plastic that's easily cleansed of grime or paint. The plasticized fabric is as supple as soft leather; glove itself is cut for comfortable fit; a rosebud print supplies decorative embellishment. Small, medium, large, $1, from Page & Biddle, Haverford, Pa.

Your saw must follow an accurate course when fitted with Tru-Cut magnetic miter. Powerful magnet secures miter against saw, affording a sawing guide that guarantees true-squared cuts every time. With this combination miter-protractor it's a cinch to skillfully transfer angles or work out complicated joining. Precision-made device adjusts to any angle; magnet has lifetime guarantee. $2.95; Elron, 225 W. Erie, Chicago, Ill.

Sta-Rite supports drapery corners with rigid plastic formed into a three-fingered plate. Thus braced, the corners can't sag or curl. Even the softest drapery fabrics are kept erect and always neat. A few seconds of hand sewing tacks Sta-Rite's three fingers to drapery heading. Made of transparent crystal plastic in sizes for 3-inch or 4-inch drapery headings. Either costs $1.45 for 5 pairs. From Hake Mfg. Co., Roanoke, Va.

Flush-Mount hangers support the weightiest wall cabinets. Whatever you hang is removable at will from the wall—a very desirable feature for flower boxes, cornices and the like. See-through fence of vertical dowels defines tailored part of garden, but preserves view of orchard and untamed beauty beyond. Note how Landscape Architect Kiley made rock outcroppings an important part of the "floorplan" design. Fall-planted, little yews like these start to grow months earlier than those planted in spring. Garden gains a year's time.

planting in the northernmost states, and in the Deep South plants will start to stir within a few weeks.

Almost everywhere in America fall weather is ideal for the construction work that your garden remodeling may entail. Flies and mosquitoes are gone for the year. Carpenters and painters work in peace. Poison ivy, hidden enemy of the garden remodelers in the spring, now signals its presence by fiery red leaf colors. Dust storms are not a fall plague, so new construction stays clean long enough to get painted, and paint stays dust-free while drying. Paints dry quickly but not so fast that they bubble into blisters the way summer heat makes them misbehave. Blacktop and concrete paving get a cool breather which promotes the good, slow cure that scorching summer sun and quick use deny.

Best of all, fall suffers not from the rush-rush of spring. Fall is a leisurely time. Landscape architects have "time to think." Their spring-harried office force has more time to create wonderfully original designs which quickly lick baffling problems that often stall remodeling projects. Nurserymen can dig and plant with pride in what they do. Peat, plant food, high quality loam, all are plentiful, delivered when promised and often sold at inducement prices.

Lumber yards and paving contractors are distressed to realize that the big home-building market is about to slow to a creep for winter, so look more kindly, even eagerly, for the business of the garden remodeler and his modest needs. Ready-mix concrete companies are happy to do business without disdain for an amateur's slowness or lack of skill in placing the mix, although these cut down the number of loads a truck can mix and deliver daily.

The last advice we have saved till now: Don't start remodeling without the help of a professional landscape architect. The cost will be the best dollar-stretcher of the whole project. The mistakes that don't happen will probably more than pay his fee. If you don't know where to find a landscape architect, see page 311 for the name of the landscape chairman of your state. He has a list of all the professional landscape architects in and around your area.

Go to see several landscape architects. Talk with them about your problem. Ask to see gardens they have designed. Get your garden remodeling under way this fall. Shrubs planted even this late in the year can fill your garden with bloom next spring. So can tulips and daffodils, planted any time until the ground freezes. Do you need extra summer shade? Move in a big tree now and enjoy the shade next summer—and every year thereafter. Garden remodeling pays off year after year.

For complete details on the order in which to do things this fall in your own garden remodeling project, see "The Lovely Old Grounds Were One Big Reason They Remodeled," in House Beautiful's 1956 Pace Setter, July 1956

When a fence marks a boundary, you can improve the view from the other side without sacrificing ground space by planting an attractive, low upkeep vine such as ivy, to give the fence a neat, "well-dressed" look.

A raised bed along walk presents wonderful opportunity for displaying fine plants, chosen for their visual affinity to the scale and texture of rock.

The narrow strip between walk and building was all the space needed for this luxuriant year-round California planting of acanthus and ivy.

mural by grandma moses

Anna Mary Robertson Moses, an American farmwife, was born on September seventh, in the year eighteen hundred and sixty. At the age of seventy-seven already a great grandmother, she began to paint.

With a direct simplicity, she put the fullness of her life on canvas. Today her pictures of the countryside and life on the farm can be found in the foremost private collections and museums throughout the world.

Now, for the first time, a Grandma Moses painting has been reproduced as a mural by a hand printing method which retains every subtlety and detail of the sensitive artist's work.

CALIFORNIA WINES

The Big Change

Writing in the early forties, Julian Street described what happened in the clamorous days immediately following prohibition—how wines were made of any grapes in California, aged "by whatever means could be thought up in a hurry and put on the market young, hard and raw. Potential friends," he wrote, "drew back and would have been lost to California wines forever but for an improvement in quality which began immediately. Then with the coming of the Second World War, when a boom hit the market, not only were young wines sold off at high prices, but too many of the wines began to taste like those made in the middle 1930's—thin, sometimes bitter and nearly always disappointing."

In addition to haste and greed, there was another important reason why California wines did not improve as swiftly as some hoped they would. Too much wine continued to be made from inferior grapes—knowingly and unknowingly, too. Even when our vintners tried to buy the best cuttings from Europe, what they received was often fraudulently misnamed and inferior. The work of men like Dr. Maynard Amerine of the University of California's Division of Viticulture at Davis has been of the greatest value in discovering frauds, helping to dispel ignorance and encouraging the propagation and use of the right grape in the right place for the right wine.

Now that the pendulum has swung, some people would have you believe that all varietal California wines, meaning those that are labeled with the name of the grape, are always superior to a wine called Burgundy, claret or what-not. This is not true. Some very fine California wines are produced by blending a number of choice grape varieties, so that each lends its own characteristics to the wine, but no one grape predominates. Such wines are well worth knowing and may in time acquire some of the prestige of the varietals. But unless you have some evidence to the contrary, at the present time it is better to rely upon wines that carry the grape as well as the vineyard name.

Answers on the Label

When you buy a bottle of California wine, look carefully at the label. It should answer three, possibly four, questions. First, what grapes were used to make it? What district did the wine come from? Who made the wine? When?

Appellations of origin on the label mean by law that the wine has been produced from grapes grown and fermented in the district. The four names of good California wine-producing areas—Napa, Sonoma, Livermore and Santa Clara—have a musical lilt and a world of significance for the connoisseur.

Who made the wine? The grape and the locale are meaningless without the maker. On page 292 you will find a list of the premium wine companies of California; notable wine labels on pages 194-195. But for quick remembering and to stand you in good stead in restaurants or in the wine shop, we quote a little litany which somebody murmured one day at lunch:

There's Almeden and Beaulieu
Cresta Blanca and Charles Krug
Louis Martini
Old Paul Masson
And Martin Ray
But for white wines, Wente.

When was it made? The vintage may not be too important in California, but it does provide a means of identification. And the proudest wines in America, as well as in Europe, do carry vintage marks.

No doubt you have heard the enthusiastic remark: "Every year is a vintage year in California." Not quite true!

In California, the differences between one year and another (as to the amount of rainfall, the total hours of sunlight, the ups and downs of temperature) are not as marked as they are in many other wine-growing regions—in Germany, for instance, or even in the Finger Lakes district in New York. Nevertheless, years are different. Some are warmer, some are cooler. Vintages can never be exactly alike, because summers are never exactly the same.

Even if there were very little difference in climatic conditions, a vintage mark on the bottle would still be useful, for it shows at a glance the age of the wine. It is a guarantee of origin, since every "dated" wine must, according to law, be bottled at the winery. Moreover, the vintage year can be an assurance of quality, not merely for those wines, particularly the heavier red wines, which need some age to achieve character, but also because the year on the bottle is an assurance that the wines which should be young, are young. This is particularly important among the white wines and the Rosés, for they are definitely at their best

When they are only a year old, or two or three. Even though it is well known that the wines of different years have different characteristics and that some, because of the vagaries of nature, will be better than others, the vintages in California seem to vary greatly from line to wine and from region to region. Up to now, no vintage chart has been compiled. (It would be very useful to know, for instance, what 1947, 1948 and 1949 appear to be years to remember in the red wines; 1952 and 1953 for white wines.)

In general, however, you must taste for yourself and, having tasted, remember; then hope you can find your love again. This is a part of the California adventure.

As a general rule, it has been observed that American wines do not need, nor can they often take, many years upon them.

Frank Schoonmaker has said that almost every table wine, red or white, is as good as it ever will be before its tenth birthday.

In some instances bulk wines are pasteurized. Then they are no longer living wines. They are stable, but "embalmed."

Although some excellent beers are pasteurized and retain at least a time their characteristic goodness, no fine wines can endure the indignity of such high temperatures. Pasteurization in the case of wines and beers is not a sanitation measure, but strictly for preservation to increase shelf life and insure shipability.

None of the premium wines of California is pasteurized.

Naturally the great name wines of California are more expensive than the run of the presses. Varietal grapes are reluctant bearers; they need expensive coddling. Fine wine making, in whatever part of the world, is a long, patient, painstaking job. All things considered, and even including state and federal taxes, the prices of even the best California table wines are astonishingly moderate, rarely more than $2; often less than $1.50. In several recent tastings, a Gold Medal Cabernet Sauvignon, selling for $1.39 in New York City, was preferred by a knowledgeable group over a Chateaux Margaux 1952 at $4.49.

California Ways with Wine

For generations Californians have been wine drinkers. Wine seems to hang to the graceful, informal California way of life. In general they adhere to the classic formulae: red wines with red meats; white wines with poultry and with fish. But often they are more inclined to consider flavor rather than color. They try to bring together food and wines of comparable intensities. A robust white wine often goes with lamb; a light red wine with broiled chicken. Generally one wine suffices and it is served only with the main course. At the buffet suppers which are so popular, many hostesses provide a choice of red and white wines. Often a Rosé is served, but in some of the more sophisticated circles the Rosé is considered "an easy way out."

Says one well-known party-giver, "At its best, served with the right food, like a cheese soufflé, for instance, a Rosé can be most delightful, but shouldn't be used just to straddle when you can't decide whether to serve white or red."

Outstanding Wine List

A carefully chosen list of outstanding California wines appears in the appendix of Baron Melville's Guide to California Wines (Doubleday, $4). In this informative and well-documented book, over a hundred red and white table wines are listed according to wine types and also according to district. Vintage wines are indicated by a "V." Special excellence is denoted by an asterisk. As for its judgments, our own HOUSE BEAUTIFUL tasters agree in general, except that we would give more acclaim to the finer Mountain Zinfandels, especially Louis Martini's 1947.

Speaking of Zinfandel, it is our one truly Californian wine. There are those who say that it has a Hungarian ancestry and that the label was lost in transit. Whatever its origin may be, it has become a native, a large producer planted widely all over the state. This was the grape used most frequently in "dago red" wines and so ruined its reputation by wrong association. It is at its best in the cool mountainous Northern counties, where it becomes the Mountain Zinfandel. Sometimes it is light; sometimes rich and full bodied; generally it is a soft wine, with a distinctive fruitiness. Like a Chianti, it is suited to a grilled steak or barbecue or to Italian, Mexican or Basque dishes.

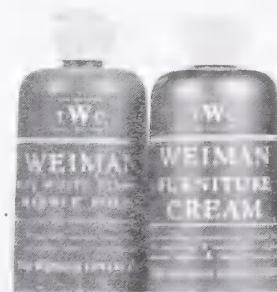

Angelo Pellegrini describes the Louis Martini Zinfandel 47:

"Five years old—a grand old age for a wine that matures fast and is often best at the end of its first year. It passed the visual test with flying colors: an intense deep red with a slight brownish cast, absorbing (Please turn the page) lutely clean and translucent. The nose sniffed rapidly in approval. And the taste? The taste was such that one glass made a second an esthetic imperative. Have you ever had an ordinary Cabernet (neither vintage nor pure) that you thought was quite good? You have? Well, you are perfectly right, but the 1947 Zinfandel is even better. None of the subtleties of those pampered French Greats 'so slow and gentle in their diffusion through the soul.' Certainly not! But, then, not ordinary either."

The Winners

Another guide or pair of guides to aid you in the selection of California wines are little books listing the wine awards at the California State Fair in Sacramento and the Los Angeles County Fair. All the top vintners do not always participate in both, or even one of the Fairs. Nor do the judgments necessarily agree, but in some cases the same wine is chosen by both groups. This happened last year in the case of Charles Krug's Cabernet Sauvignon, which won both Gold Medals. The State Fair, in general, represents expert opinion. The Los Angeles County Fair relies rather more for its judges on members of wine and food societies. Not so professional, but more enthusiastic. In addition to listing awards in each class, the books show the number of exhibits and also indicate the quantity of the wine on hand, which may vary from about 100 to 50,000 gallons. Listing of wine awards may be secured by writing to the Wine Advisory Board, 717 Market Street, San Francisco, Calif.

Of Men and Wines

In tasting and judging California wines, it is important to judge them on their own for what they are. They are not copies and yet on the other hand, unlike the wines of New York State, they are not an entirely different genre. California wines are made in the classic European tradition, of the same classic grapes. So far, few have attained greatness. But then again there are few greats anywhere, and those of France and of the German Rhineland represent the flowering of 400 years. So perhaps Louis Martini is right when he says we should not expect to produce the noblest red wines for another 25 years. "As for white wines, it may take 50 years."

In the meantime, what we have deserves serious consideration and a good deal of respect. Getting to know California wines represents a real challenge. For they are an expression not only of a new climate geographically but also of a new climate of thinking. They differ not only with the character of the land, but also with the character of the makers—their backgrounds, their points of view.

With apologies to many others who deserve at least as much attention, here are seven to prove a point:

Beautiful Place—Beautiful Wine

You can almost taste the aristocracy of France in the wines of Beaulieu Vineyards, often designated as BV. If your palate is sensitive, you could take a glass of this Special Reserve Cabernet, named after the founder of the vineyard, Georges de La Tour, and know that he belonged to a family deeply rooted in the traditions of Bordeaux and Burgundy.

His widow, who took over after his death in 1940, was the Great Lady of the California Wine Industry. She, too, has left her imprint upon the wines, as well as upon the exquisite little gem of a country house and the gardens with their boxwood hedges and sculptured topiary.

Now Beaulieu is owned by the daughter of its founders, Hélène de Pins, who, with her husband he Marquis, continues to deepen the close relationship between France and California. As someone has pointed out, there is even the imperial quality of Czarist Russia in Beaulieu wines. The winemaker who has been in charge since 1938 is André Tchelitscheff, who has a special genius for combining the grace of the Old World with the technology of the New.

Elegant Almaden

Elegant is the word for the wines of Almaden, but it is a Franco-California elegance. These wines remember the Frenchman Étienne Théé, farmer from Bordeaux, who was lured by gold in '49, but remained rooted through his vines. His Parisian son-in-law, Charles Drefranc, brought to the new vineyards cuttings from Champagne, Bordeaux, Burgundy and the valley of the Rhone, along with oak cooperage sent from Spain and France around Cape Horn.

The French influence continues under the proprietorship of the Benoists, Louis and Kay, native San Franciscans with a French heritage. They are ably assisted by a winemaker renowned on both continents, Oliver Goulet.

In the old ranch house built more than a hundred years ago, we were served a lunch that would have done honor to the proudest chateau in Epernay. But the ham was Virginian; the pâté was made from their own Californian-bred pheasant; the rainbow trout came from their own streams, the lettuce was Bibb, and the crêpes au citron were served on a platter garished with lemon leaves accompanied with sections of fruit picked only minutes before and still fragrantly warm from the California sun.

The champagnes of Almaden are noteworthy, but probably the most famous and popular wine of this vineyard is the Grenache Rosé.

French connoisseur recently called it "a triumph, mass produced!" For the Grenache grape is relatively prolific, a heavy bearer among varietals. The wine is bottled young as it should be, and sent by the hundred thousands to all parts of the United States. Within the past year some cases have even been exported to France, where the Almaden Grenache Rosé appears on the menu at Maxim's, along with Rock Cornish game hen.

"A gag perhaps," says Louis Benoist modestly, "or perhaps a gesture of appreciation. My friends tell me it makes them feel at home."

Completely American in the pioneer spirit is the recent planting of more than 1,300 acres of grapes of the most treasured varieties. Here several startling innovations are being tried. "If successful, it is possible that the wine industry of the whole world may be altered by Almaden."

The Dean

"Dean of Wine Growers," Angelo Pellegrini calls Louis Martini in a lyrical chapter of his recent best seller, Americans by Choice. If one can taste France in Beaulieu and Almaden, then surely in these wines there is a gusto of Italy. Louis Martini looks more like President Eisenhower than the President's own pictures and is in every essential just as American, but neither he nor his wines forget his Italian ancestry, or his training as a young man at the University of Genoa and Piedmont.

Even in his sixties Louis Martini is a constant innovator. His most ardent admirers as well as his critics agree that "he can never let well enough alone. He is always trying something new . . . reaching out, dreaming of perfection but always of a perfection that has an Italian accent and a high acidity."

What is known as the Martini Kingdom includes three great vineyards. The one of which he is proudest is in the high mountains of Sonoma County. He named it Monte Rosso, because of its red volcanic soil, which is said to give a special quality to his cool mountain grapes.

In addition to a number of vintage varietal table wines, the Louis Martini table wines include a Monte Rosso that, as might be expected, resembles a fine red Chianti and is even put up in the traditional basket—wrapped fiaschi.

The White Wine Wentes

Although they do make some red wine and a Rosé, the name of Wente is synonymous with the best of California white wines. Their background is German. The founder, Carl H. Wente, came from Hanover, but he did not in the new land remain too wedded to the wines of the Rhine. He imported and acclimated in the Livermore Valley the finest sauterne grapes and also the Pinot Chardonnay used in the making of white burgundy and champagne. Always known and prized as quality wines, Wente standards have never wavered. The two sons now in command, Ernest and Herman, continue.

tinue to concentrate only on table wines. Those who appreciate real sauternes will find Wente's Sweet Semillon unsurpassed. It is a true spätlese made from the last late picking of selected grapes which have the maximum richness and sweetness.

Masson, the Man and the Vineyard

One of the more colorful characters in the California wine industry was another Frenchman, another enterprising son-in-law, the lusty Burgundian, Paul Masson. He came in the eighties to work at Almaden for Charles Lefrane, speedily married the boss's daughter, became his partner, then his successor and embarked on a long and merry life. So the legend goes.

It was in his golden champagne and in one of his high claw-footed bath tubs that Anna Held is supposed to have taken her celebrated bath. The whereabouts of this bath tub is still being questioned. The Louis Benoists insist that they have it in their powder room. And on the day we saw it, there were three Anna Held bouquets on its shining mahogany rim. But others say that the champagne bath party would not have occurred at the family ranch house, since Paul Masson had erected for himself on the very top of the mountain at Saratoga a winery pleasure dome as fabulous as Kubla Khan.

His name soon became, and still remains, one of the most respected in California champagnes.

Today the Paul Masson vineyards have been taken over by two well-known wine families of Germany: the Fromms and Sichels. The Fromms have been wine growers on the Rhine for five generations, and the Sichels are well known as vintners and shippers, not only in Germany, but also in Bordeaux.

Rugged on a Mountain Top

Stormiest vintner of them all and most controversial is Martin Ray, known as Rusty, an all-American individualist who, in his fifties, still looks and talks like the hero of a football game. He was born and brought up literally in the shadow and under the spell of the great Paul Masson in the little town of Saratoga, California. In his boyhood, his eyes were on the vineyards on the mountain, which, later, as a successful refugee from the stockmarket, he was able to buy.

His methods are a curious mixture of tradition and innovation. All his table wines go into champagne bottles with champagne corks.

"Pure swank," some people say. "Better aging," says Martin Ray.

His are the most personal wines—hand-made in every sense of the word. All the work of the vineyard is done by Martin Ray, his writer-wife and two sons, one of whom is a plant physiologist who flies back from Harvard each year to help with the vintage. Production is extremely limited. Only the best of years appear under the Martin Ray label. Lesser vintages are sold. Prices are high, just a high and sometimes higher than French imports.

Martin Ray does not approve of modern methods of filtering or fining. His wines are clarified according to the most ancient usage. No sulphur-dioxide is used, not even a sulphur candle burned in the casks, as it has been immemorially in France. Often his wine will throw a sediment like the Burgundies to which they are related. Right now Martin Ray wines are a Hollywood sensation, and actor Burgess Meredith is about to become his colleague.

His Madame Pinot Champagne has many ardent admirers. A surprising wine! It is a blanc de noir, a "white" wine (really amber rose) which is made entirely of black (Pinot Noir) grapes, the exact opposite of the current rage in Paris where they esteem most highly the blanc de blanc champagne, made of all white grapes.

Martin Ray's Cabernet Sauvignon 1947 would be admired anywhere, and the '48 is fine too. Perhaps he is proudest of his Pinot Noir 1951. There is only one Martin Ray white wine, Pinot Chardonnay 1952—all Chardonnay grapes, pure and unblended.

Only a very few shops, like Sherry Wine & Spirits in New York, carry Martin Ray wines, but the Rays are accustomed to special orders and well versed in local and state laws. A letter addressed to them at Mt. Eden, Saratoga, California, will bring you information as to where and how you can buy their wines.

In Bungled Bungalow and Trouble Indemnity, we are introduced to UPA's original character, the far-sighted Mr. Magoo. It may be that the world is divided, unevenly, between those people who enjoy Mr. Magoo and those who do not. Possibly there is a third kind: those who do not enjoy him very much, but not enough to hate him. Mr. Magoo is a round little man with a rough voice and an imperious manner; his most characteristic pose is that of a man on the brink of disaster. He is perpetually walking a plank, but unlike other cartoon characters who appeal to our savage humors for the ways in which they survive every imaginable pummeling, Mr. Magoo's appeal is less primitive. We laugh at him and with him for the way in which he unwittingly outwits each calamity. He talks to himself and to other people whom he has mistaken for some other person or object. When he looks out the glass door of a washing machine he thinks it is a television set; the long underwear churning in the tub is to him a picture of Florence Chadwick swimming in the English Channel. He is always at odds with reality. Bungled Bungalow deals with Mr. Magoo's efforts to buy a house, and in Trouble Indemnity he tips his hat to disaster one time after another while on his way to collect an insurance claim.

These five UPA cartoons are each one-reel long (about ten minutes) and in color (wonderful color). They are leased through Columbia Pictures to a number of authorized 16mm dealers. Rental price is $5 for each film. The source with which I am most familiar is Cinema Guild, at 10 Fiske Place, Mount Vernon, N. Y. Affiliated offices are at the Audio Film Center, 522 Clement Street, San Francisco 18, California, and at the Audio Film Center, 2209 East 75th Street, Chicago 49, Illinois.

A number of UPA cartoons have been made for industrial sponsors. My favorite at the moment is a bit of fancy called Look Who's Driving. It's a pretty good lesson in driver safety for teen-age and adult audiences, but there would be no harm in showing it to youngsters too. Charlie Younghead, the film's hero, notices the stupid things people do when they're driving—jumping the lights, arguing over a right of way, acting like kids instead of grownups. But when Charlie gets into a jam, he too reverts to infancy and loses control.

The film has a happy ending. It is eight minutes long, in color, and can be obtained free of charge from its sponsor, the Aetna Casualty and Surety Company, Public Education Department, Hartford, Connecticut.

or through local Aetna representatives.

A wholly new idea for children's films, which many parents will immediately welcome, is Morton Schindel's series entitled Picture Book Parade. Mr. Schindel, himself the father of three youngsters, has evolved a simple technique for bringing to life the original illustrations of children's books that has proved enormously successful over the years with young and old. My favorite, among the first seven to be released in the film series, is Stone Soup, a French folk tale. This version was written and illustrated by Marcia Brown, who also reads the story for the film. And what a charming story it is, with its three hungry soldiers who arrive in a small village one day only to be told by the distrusting villagers that there is no food available. The soldiers show the villagers how to make soup from stones—and when they depart the next day, the whole village is impressed with what the soldiers have accomplished. Stone Soup is eleven minutes long and available in color or in black-and-white. Don't miss it!

The Story of Ping is another fine story, written by Marjorie Flack, illustrated by Kurt Wiese, and spoken in the film by Beman Lord. It's about a little duck who lives on a house-boat in China. One day Ping wanders away to see how the rest of the world lives, but he ends up safe at home with his own family. The film is ten minutes long and available in color only.

Make Way for Ducklings, by Robert McCloskey, is also about a duck family, this one living on a lake in the park of a big, big American city. The drawings are quite life-like, but their realism in no way deprives the story of its charm. The reader here is Owen Jordan. The film is eleven minutes long and available in color or black-and-white.

Wanda Gag's Millions of Cats (ten minutes, black-and-white) is Available in color only.

The Story of Ping will entertain any child.

Andy and the Lion is a modern Androcles story to delight all ages.

Fast-moving and bright,

another charmer, also narrated by Owen Jordan. It's about a little old man who goes off to find the prettiest cat in the world to take home to his little old wife. Out on a hill he sees dozens of cats, hundreds, thousands, millions of cats. Because each one claims to be the prettiest, he takes them all home with him. Wanda Gag's heavy black lines are a bit old-fashioned or perhaps too sophisticated for today's comic-strip generation, but the story is direct and simple enough to compensate. There is a considerable amount of repetition in the story, which may annoy older children, but it certainly will enhance the enjoyment of the younger ones. In black-and-white only.

FOR up-to-dateness, Rex Parkins's The Red Carpet is fast-moving and brightly colored. It's about a hotel carpet that ups and runs away, out of the city, over the highway and down to the river, where it just so happens that an important foreign dignitary is arriving at the moment. It's lots of fun, nine minutes long and in color.

Hardie Granatky's Hercules is about an old-fashioned steam-smoking fire-engine which becomes a hero when its modern counterparts fail to get to the fire. The colors are boisterous and the drawing evokes the spirit of turn-of-the-century America. Andy and the Lion, by James Daugherty, is a modern Androcles story about an American farm boy who befriends a circus lion and later reaps the reward for his kindnesses.

The films are eleven minutes and ten minutes long, respectively; the Hercules story is told by Owen Jordan. Andy, by Ralph Camargo.

Music for the Picture Book Parade series was composed by Arthur Kleiner, who plans and plays the music accompanying the silent films at the Museum films at the Museum of Modern Art.

Sound effects also add to the liveliness of the films, which all in all are executed with fidelity, good fun and good taste. Rental price for each film is $5 for color versions, $3 for those that are available in black-and-white. Sales prices are $100 and $50 respectively. The films are produced and distributed by Weston Woods Studios, Weston, Connecticut.

Six more picture-book films are near enough to completion to begin thinking about when planning programs for the fall and winter. They are Jenny's Birthday Book by Esther Averill; Little Red Lighthouse by Swift and Ward; Georgie by Robert Bright; Circus Baby by the Petershams; Lentil by Robert McCloskey; and Mike Mulligan and His Steamshovel by Virginia Lee Burton. You can be sure, even before seeing them, that the film versions will be true—in word, picture and spirit—to the original children's books, all of which are modern classics.

FAIRY tales galore are to be found in the collection of Lotte Reiniger films recently released in the U.S. They include such familiar ones as Cinderella, Puss in Boots, Hansel and Gretel and Sleeping Beauty, along with the less famous stories of Thumbelina, The Gallant Little Tailor and The Frog Prince. In all there are 13 titles, each abounding in wicked giants, lovely princesses and magic spells.

Lotte Reiniger's silhouette animation films have a charm of their own, unlike anything that has yet been done on film. Lifelike and delicate, her characters move only in profile, ensuring that much of the romantic make-believe quality of the original fairy stories is retained in this translation into a visual medium. There are no other fairy-tale films that hold a candle to these. In fact, most of the others (puppets and live-action and cartoons alike) are unacceptable by any standards which involve good taste. Each of the Reiniger films is ten minutes long and in black-and-white, with original music that is gay or ominous as the occasion demands.

Rental price for each film is a mere $3; sale price is $50. They were produced by Primrose Productions in London and are available from Contemporary Films, 13 East 37th Street, New York 16, New York.

A number of Lotte Reiniger productions of earlier vintage are also available from Contemporary Films, but I think they require some consideration and personal decision before being shown to youngsters. Adults, however, may be interested in the rather snappy, and quite dated, treatment she gives to Carmen, Galatea and Papageno (each ten minutes long). Aladdin (12-minute excerpt from the feature film, Adventures of Prince Achmet) and Harlequin (18 minutes). Plans are also under way to release The Adventures of Prince Achmet, which you may be surprised to learn is the first feature-length animated film to be recorded in motion picture history: it dates from the period 1923-26. For further information about its availability, write to Contemporary Films at the address above.

ANOTHER cartoon film of distinction, that recently has been given 16mm release, is The Town Musicians. The familiar story about the donkey, dog, cat and rooster who set out for Bremen to become town musicians is here quite faithfully translated into a color cartoon with excellent music and voices, delightful characters and a fairly fierce rendition of the fight between the animals and the robbers. The film is nine minutes long and in color. Rental is $5, sale $100. The film is distributed by Brandon Films, 200 West 57th Street, New York 19, New York.

The full-length Disney cartoon, Dumbo, is one that seems never to lose its appeal for young and old, year after year. It is about a baby elephant with big ears, who is the laughing stock among the circus animals until he proves his value by learning to fly. The characters, if your guests are amusing, and you don't tire so fast when you are enjoying things.

The next secret is to make the cocktail part of the party a do-it-yourself proposition. When the guests arrive I greet them with enthusiasm, and see to it that they know everyone and see that they get their first drink. Then I tell them, "You know where the bar is, so when you want another drink, please help yourself." This puts the guest on his own. I carry this over to the food, too, as you will see shortly. Now you will be less tired, for your job has not been one of trying to be a combination of waitress, bartender and cook. You are saving yourself to enjoy your own party and to be up to giving those lingerers some hearty food before they leave.

For the do-it-yourself food, I have trays of various things, so the guests can assemble their own "Dagwoods." A tray of smoked salmon (either sliced or half a salmon ready to be sliced by each person) placed beside a choice of things to put the salmon on, such as pumpnickel and crackers ("Tavern Appetizers" Pumpnickel crackers made by Southern Biscuit Co., Richmond, Va.), together with wedges of lemon, a bowl of capers and a big pepper grinder. A tray of assorted cheeses is easy, too, for people to use. I prefer bread with cheese, so I provide sourdough rolls sliced thin, pumpnickel and Russian rye with caraway seeds. Also a crock of mustard.

HAVE another hearty tray of one or several sliced cold meats—any you wish from smoked turkey to a whole filet of beef, sliced thin. (Don't have ham or chicken, though, for they are so trite at cocktail parties.) To go with the cold meats, slice thin a large loaf of French bread. Put it on the table beside a crock of creamed butter, and a crock of home-made mustard (recipe later). The creamed butter spreads so easily and everyone thinks he is eating country butter. Whipped butter, which you can buy in some parts of the country, gives you this effect. Put it in a pretty old-fashioned crock and you'll heighten the effect.

Add to this hearty fare a big bowl of nuts, seasoned to your taste, and a bowl of olives (pitted or stuffed but not the kind with seeds, for who wants to look at the seeds piling up in the ash trays!), soaked in your favorite French dressing for several hours. Add a bowl of Japanese rice crackers (made with rice flour and seaweed and deliciously crispy) and a bowl of hard-boiled eggs (shelled, natch), sprinkled with salt, pepper and your favorite seasoning, such as Beau Monde. These always vanish like snow in August. I also find that a platter of raw vegetables, asparagus tips, artichoke hearts or prawns, served with a bowl of mayonnaise, goes over big. (I dress up store-bought mayonnaise with the yolk of an egg, cream, and a slight flurry of curry powder and people always think it is some delicious homemade rarity.)

So you see, you really have enough food to rescue the famished. And if they are really hungry they don't mind making their own pet compositions. And you haven't wasted hours spreading and trimming and chopping and slicing. You're rested and free to be the hostess. And you have the time and peace of mind to see whether replenishments need to be brought in from the kitchen, whether the ice is running out and other useful but not arduous chores.

FOR THE guests who are lingering on, and the late ones who "really must go," now that it is after eight, I like to give them what I call "one for the road"—a big coffee cup of hearty soup. I ask them to come to the kitchen to get it. The change of pace of moving to another room is agreeable, and there is a warmth and coziness about a kitchen that everyone seems to like. This gives you a chance to clear away the remains in the living room or wherever your party went on, so the house is fit to live in again. And the remaining guests will drift back in there very soon to a spruced up atmosphere, while you bring out the meal which has been coasting in the oven all this while.

There are two wonderful soups to have at such a time: French onion soup and black bean. How to make onion soup? Just get Hormel's canned onion soup, and add two cans of Campbell's consommé for every can of onion soup. Have a bowl of toasted French bread and a bowl of Parmesan cheese. As easy as the opening of a tin.

The other soup (it takes a little more time to mix) is black bean (Please turn the page) by Campbell. Lace it well with sherry (don't you love that expression; I don't know where it came from but it sounds attractive). Anyway, pour in a good sherry, allowing 1 tablespoon of sherry per cup and have bowls of sliced lemon, sieved egg white and sieved egg yolks. When you are boiling the eggs for the party, just save out four or six and sieve them and store in refrigerator boxes until ready to serve. It can be done the day before.

Let the guests help themselves and sit anywhere, for they can manage the soup in the oversize coffee cups.

The menu I often use at such a time is baked corned beef, one of several casseroles, a mixed green salad, and a bowl of mixed fresh fruit (whatever is in season that is fine), pots full of coffee, and doughnuts.

I gussy up a corned beef sans cabbage, until it becomes a dreamy item. It is baked like a ham after it has been simmered in a court bouillon. This has to be done ahead of time for that good flavor, and anyway then it is off your mind.

Baked Corned Beef

- 1 large, lean, boneless piece of corned beef
- 4 carrots
- 1 large or 2 small onions
- 4 stalks celery, with leaves
- 10 to 12 pepper corns

Put the corned beef in a large kettle and cover it with cold water. Bring it to a boil slowly, and when it has reached the boiling point, remove it from the stove and pour the liquid down the drain. Refill the kettle with hot water and again return it to the stove. Add the carrots cut in large pieces, the celery and celery leaves, the large onion cut in half (or two small) with five cloves stuck in each half, and ten pepper corns. Bring it again slowly to a boil. Turn down the heat to the simmer level and simmer until tender, allowing an hour to each pound. Do not test for tenderness by puncturing meat with a fork. Remove from the heat and allow to cool in the liquor. Then refrigerate until an hour before the party. Allowing it to stand in the broth for two days improves it tremendously, and it must have at least twenty-four hours to bask in its delightfully fragrant bath. Take the corned beef out of the pot and taste the broth. (If it is not too salty, you can use it for soup for the family.) Wipe the top fat with a paper towel. Put the meat in a buttered casserole that can go from oven to table. Then scatter four tablespoons of dark brown sugar over the top. Remember, fat side up, for this adds juiciness to the meat. Toss on a few cassia buds, and six to eight tablespoons of good sherry. Heat thoroughly in a 300° F. oven. It takes from one to two hours depending on the size of your roast. The top should be a golden glazed brown.

You can fix the corned beef with the sugar and sherry well ahead of the party, then pop it into the oven an hour or so before you wish to serve it.

Your guests will feel that your bounty and hospitality are truly genuine and unlimited if you are this thoughtful of their inner needs. Of course, food is not the only thing that makes a party, but when the food is not right for the situation it can spoil a party.

An amusing stunt that I saw my friends use the other night is worth reporting here. It got the party off to a gay start, for all the guests came in laughing. They had a red carpet outside the front door—yes, literally, a red carpet.

Get a cheap cotton string one at some store like your J. C. Penney. It should be nearly as wide as your front door, and at least a yard long. I got mine small enough to go into the Bendix, for I am always looking for the easy way, and yet I want things to be gay and spanking clean. I won't roll out my red carpet for every party, for the gag would wear off too soon. I'll save it so the folks will see it only once or twice a year, but I'll certainly use it during the holidays.

P.S. Oh yes, the mustard recipe! It was given to me by a friend, and is known around our house as "Mary's Mustard."

- 1/4 pound of Colman's mustard
- 2 tablespoons flour
- 2 tablespoons sugar
- 1 teaspoon salt

Mix dry ingredients well, add enough water to make a thin paste. Cook in a double boiler, stirring constantly until it has thickened. Remove from fire and thin down with equal parts of vinegar and olive oil. Tarragon vinegar adds a good flavor. Keep in a covered jar in the refrigerator.

of Naples besides Capri. This is Ischia, a volcanic rock of green hills and sandy beaches, equipped by nature with a benign, temperate climate, radio-active springs, fertile vineyards (they mix their cement with wine here), and an unspoiled, lonely charm which in some parts reminds us of Cape Cod. It's about two hours from Naples by steamers of the Societa di Navigazione Partenopea, leaving Naples daily at 9:00 A.M.

Totally innocent of the merry, mad didoes of Capri, it is favored by Italian vacationists for a relaxing, unpretentious holiday. They come en famille to bathe in its sunshine and in its mineral baths. These hot mud baths you can take for the fun of it, of course, when you're not sea-bathing or otherwise disporting yourself, but they're especially renowned for relieving arthritis and rheumatism. All are given under medical supervision. Most famous baths on the island are the Thermae Regina Isabella on the shores of Lacco Ameno, where a brand new hotel, the Regina Isabella, opened this past summer. (Double room, bath and meals about $7 a day.) Big feature here is that guests can enjoy their hot mud bathing in the privacy of their own bathrooms.

Beaches on this northern side of the island are excellent at Lacco Ameno, Casamicciola and Porto d'Ischia. The Grande Albergo e dei Pini, a sleek little modern hotel set in a pine grove a few miles outside of Porto d'Ischia, offers guests beach, sleepy pine-fragrant air, an American bar, and modern Italian décor, and, in the three years since it has been open, it has developed a reputation for unusually good food.

Incidental Ischian information includes the intelligence that Ulysses is supposed to have stopped off here; that Caesar Augustus's daughter, Julia, unenlightenedly persuaded the emperor to swap this island for Capri; that Italy's precocious sixteenth-century poetess, Vittoria Colonna, lived here in a castle you may still see, carrying on her correspondence with Michelangelo, Ghiberti and Castiglione; that Richard the Lion-Hearted visited the place with his Crusaders; that capers grow wild here before they get into those skinny little bottles; that the wines are superb, often mistaken for the much-touted Capri wines; and that, if you're lucky, you may get to taste a walnut liqueur in Forio, or a flowery local nectar which the natives with romantic accuracy call sorriso del sole, the smile of the sun.

Dream Cruise to the Orient

Seems to us that the real sparkler among this winter's all-expense trips to the Orient is a 62-day sea-air cruise that's heading for some of the most exotic lands you've ever seen in a daydream. And what appeals most to us is that it gives you plenty of time in each place to get to know it.

We, for instance, can just picture ourselves sailing leisurely across the Pacific to Japan, aboard the American President Lines' "S. S. President Wilson." Then, instead of just stopping off at Japan, as so many trips do, intimately touring the countryside, rice paddies, Fujiyama and all, for ten days by car, Nikko, Kamakura, Miyano-shita, Nara, with its picturesque deer park and the greatest collection of Oriental art in the world, and Kyoto, the ancient capital of Japan, are all included, as well as Japan's principal cities.

Then, by Japan Airlines plane to Hong Kong, for five days of this cosmopolitan shopper's paradise where, we hear, you can order up anything from a dining room buffet to a hand-embroidered nightgown and have it perfectly made in a matter of days. Besides the opportunity to sample the famous Hong Kong cuisine on one of the floating restaurants, there's a junket by steamer, among the sampans, along the South China coast to the fascinating, smuggling, gambling Portuguese port of Macao.

Next stop, via Pan American plane from Hong Kong, is Bangkok in Thailand, identified in our home-conscious dreams with the fabulous richness and color of Thai silk, precious lacquerwork, and that handsome black-handle gilt cutlery. This is the land of Anna and the King, gold-encrusted barges, floating markets, pearl-inlaid temples, and temple dancers crowned with spired caps of gold. And there are four days of all this glamour on the schedule.

HOW TO LEAVE HOME

After this, one of those extraordinary travel experiences you can hardly believe could happen to you—a motor trip through Cambodia to the ancient, now jungle-ringed city of Angkor and its phenomenal temple city of Angkor-Wat, that magnificent masterpiece of stone carvings and mystery. And if we were doing it, we wouldn't leave the place until we'd acquired a cement casting of a carved goddess. Then, a unique excursion by jeep which few travelers have the chance to make—a drive into the jungle to Banteay Srei. The names alone make us want to go.

Flying back to Hong Kong, via Bangkok, you voyage home restfully aboard the "S. S. President Cleveland." As extra lagniappe, you stop over for 14 hours in Hawaii, going and coming.

The trip leaves San Francisco on November 23 and returns on January 23. Cost: $2,875, all-inclusive. All accommodations are First Class, and a seasoned traveler-shopper accompanies the group. For more information write the sponsors of the trip: American President Lines, 29 Broadway, New York, or Bankers and Merchants Travel Service, 511 Fifth Avenue, New York City. ### Queen Frederica

One of the most enthusiastic sea-going reports of the season comes from a couple who restfully interrupted their continental sight-seeing by going down to Gibraltar and embarking on a ten-day cruise to Greece via the Home Lines' "S. S. Queen Frederica." (Eastbound trip originates in New York, calls at Gibraltar, Palermo, Naples and Piraeus. First-class fare to Piraeus, about $415; Tourist, about $240; rates to nearer ports are less.)

Just hear what they have to say. "This was a magical, leisurely interlude in the typical hectic life of a tourist. What we liked best about it, besides the lovely gentle calmness of the sea itself, was the size of the ship—not too big so that you feel swallowed up, and not too small so that you feel forced to surrender your privacy. It carries 1,050 passengers, and every one of them is treated as if he were a special guest in a large and well-ordered home. It's a home with a swimming pool, a choice of three menus at each meal (American, Greek and what they call Continental—sometimes French, sometimes Italian), and a rare aura of hospitality.

"Part of the fun of the trip was that you could poke around behind the scenes as much as you wanted. And we wanted. We marched right into the kitchen, watched the men at work, all 63 of them, and made friends with Master Chef John Danglis. We even accompanied him on his inspection as he tasted the pasticcio (macaroni with layers of veal and lots of cheese) and the artichokes and lamb, which are daily favorites on the menu.

"The hostess—and she really behaves with all the charm and diplomacy of a hostess in her own home—is Miss Maria Fidaio, a handsome woman of remarkable energy who is just as capable of teaching guests the Greek language and Greek folk dancing as she is of getting up an impromptu children's party. She's the organizer of the ship's social life, plans entertainments, cocktail parties and games, but does it all with such discretion, such leisureliness and grace, that you never feel you have to participate. (Would that more social directors were like her!)

"The host here is a man of distinction and special dignity. Admiral Constantine Condoyannis, former chief of staff in the Greek Navy and now the captain of the 'Queen Frederica.' He rules his ship with efficiency, inspires a sense of confidence, as every sea captain should. But he is also a congenial man who devotes a part of every day to making himself known to his guests, answering questions or exchanging a joke. We felt as if he were a far cry from some of the lofty, inaccessible captains we've seen on other ships. 'I am the father here,' he said one day, smiling, and he said something quite close to fact, for when the time came to shake hands with him in Piraeus, we felt as if we were house-guests saying good-bye to the head of the house.

Bread and Butter

These days, we're told, the most welcome thank-you gift you can send to people who have befriended you abroad is a nice fat bundle of American cake mixes. Our labor-saving blueberry muffins, angel food, brownies, gingerbread and hot roll mix seem to have acquired an edge on nylon stockings. But nylons are still highly acceptable, too, not because they're scarce, but because the American version is usually sheerer and better made.

Swedish Rhapsody

According to the traveler's law of averages there is always bound to be "One Memorable Day" in every trip. A bemused returnee from a Swedish summer cites the sunny June Sunday he spent on the little-known Kinda Canal, drifting idyllically for 50 miles from Lynköping to Horn, through the very heart of forest and farmland in the fertile southern province of Östergötland. He says he never felt more peacefully in tune with the universe, nor closer to the spirit of a land, than he did aboard the old-fashioned canal boat, eating his galley-cooked lunch of sild, meat balls and Three Crowns Beer, while the country slipped placidly by, almost within reach of his hand. The canal was finished in 1871, as was the canal boat (he thinks), and furnishes 15 exciting moments as you pass through its 15 locks.

The personable old boat leaves Lynköping (Swedes say something like "linchirping") at 8:00 A.M. Sundays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, gets to Horn about 6:45 P.M. Then from the nearby railway station at Kisa you can take a one-hour train trip back to Lynköping. Canal trip costs about $2, as does the lunch.

Bus to Copenhagen

Other bright-eyed travelers report ecstatically on Linjebuss International's four-day and three-night trip from Stockholm to Copenhagen, via bus, Göta Canal boat, and steamer. First day out from Stockholm you drive by bus to Lynköping, where next morning you board a boat for a trip through the Göta Canal to Jonköping. At Jonköping it's back on the bus again for a day's drive through Vaxjo to Kalmar. On the fourth day you pass through the Swedish chateau country, through Karlskrona, with a stop at Orrefors to see the famous crystal made, then through the university town of Lund and on to Malmo where a steamer takes you right into the quays of Copenhagen. Annals of this trip are replete with tales of charming country inns where stops are made for lunch. Cost, $48. This is a summertime trip, but we bring it to your attention now just in case you're working on plans for a Scandinavian jaunt next year.

Tokyo over the Pole

If you're in a hurry to get to Tokyo, Scandinavian Airlines System will be ready by February 25, 1957, to transport you by a new route, right over the North Pole. Flights are from Copenhagen or Stockholm in DC-7C's get you to Japan via Anchorage, Alaska, in a matter of 30 hours. Subject to government approval, one-way rates are: First Class, $957.60; Tourist, $658. SAS is an old hand at this polar business, regularly running over-the-pole flights from Los Angeles to Copenhagen, every day in the week. First Class one-way, $613.70, plus tax; Tourist, $409, plus tax.

Perfect Present

If we were planning a sojourn in Florida, Colorado, New York, Cuba or Puerto Rico, the best bon voyage you could lavish on us would be a Couture National Car Rental System gift certificate. In other words, instead of sending fruit, flowers or good books, you'd deposit a nice little chunk of car-rental money with Couture; they'd send us a certificate, and when we got to any of the above places, we'd present the ducat to the local Couture man and enjoy the luxury of driving a car as long as your money lasted. What a brilliant Christmas present for Florida-bound friends and relatives! Since rates vary in different places, write for more detailed information to Couture, 825 Fifth Street, Miami Beach, Florida.

South Jersey Arts and Crafts

From November 27 through 29, in Haddonfield, N. J., 32 master craftsmen will be demonstrating their skills from 12 noon to 10 P.M. each day in the Eighth Annual South Jersey Arts and Crafts Show. Silversmithing, weaving, potting, enameling, rug hooking, ironwork, leather tooling and painting in oil and water color will be represented. And it's nice to know that while visitors are looking on and getting better acquainted with the techniques of handcrafts, their ticket money will be helping the medical research supported by the Junior Section of the Haddon Fortnightly, the organization which sponsors the show in their clubhouse at Kings Highway and Grove Street, Haddonfield, N. J.

To get the most out of your built-in hi fi, why not pick a place of particular interest in your home? Here are some suggestions

EZRA STOLLER

If you've got a fireplace wall free for use (and you're seriously limited on space), then here's one way to build in your hi-fi units, giving the speaker the openness it needs for best acoustics.

Almost an entire home entertainment system can be contained on shelves of a book-case wall: books themselves, high-fidelity sound-reproducing equipment and a custom television installation (by Fleetwood, here).

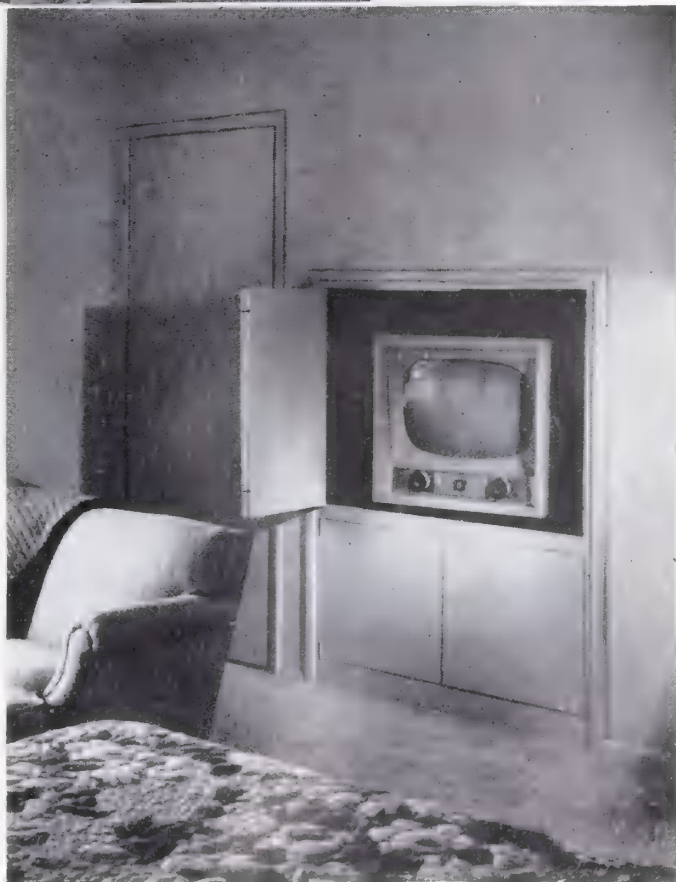

MAYNARD PARKER

Here is another fireplace wall high fidelity setup, all of it fitted behind closed doors to keep the room clear of the feeling of clutter. Added feature is the TV set on a swivel. Same Motorola set swivels from living room (above) to bedroom (below). Fireplace wall is the natural center of room interest.

With new varieties developed for home gardeners, it is no trick to grow chrysanthemums almost as large as those florists sell. Allow just one to three of the strongest shoots of young plant to grow, removing competing side buds so energy goes to one at top.

second spring. (More about multiplying your plants later.)

Chrysanthemums are predictable, too. With a flowering mechanism regulated primarily by length of day (or more accurately, by length of night), you can count on a variety being in bloom in the garden on the same date, year after year. This, in spite of a late spring or some other circumstance which might determine whether your chrysanthemums were planted in April or in June.

Thus, since the flowers remain in good condition for two weeks or more, it's a simple matter to plan for either one big display with all the chrysanthemums blooming at the same time, or to combine early, midseason and late varieties to extend the flowering period from August until hard frosts blacken the plants. The catalog descriptions usually indicate flowering dates.

Because chrysanthemums will not form and develop flowers until the day length is 13½ hours or less, commercial growers classify them according to the length of time, needed from bud formation until flowering. In the garden, where the length of the day is governed by nature, only those varieties which require seven or eight weeks to mature will flower in the far north before frost comes. These are the early and midseason varieties listed in most catalogs.

However, it is possible to flower chrysanthemums, even in the northernmost areas of the country, by creating long nights (or short days) artificially before they would normally occur in August. Just set a box or a frame covered with black cloth, canvas or tar paper over the plant or plants at 5:00 p.m. and remove it the next day at 7:00 or 8:00 a.m.

Figuring backward, the artificial shading should begin seven, eight or nine weeks (according to variety) before the flowers are wanted. All light must be excluded from the plants during the shading periods, but it won't matter if you forget to cover the plants one night a week.

Another pleasant fact about chrysanthemums is the ease with which their growth can be controlled. To a considerable extent the height of the flowering plant can be determined by the date on which it was started from a cutting or division. Obviously, the longer a plant has had to grow, the bigger it will be when fall comes.

Chrysanthemums to be trained upright into treelike or espaliered forms or downward as cascades must be started early, preferably in a greenhouse in February or March, if there is to be sufficient growth by fall. Pot plants, on the other hand, which are best kept low and compact, needn't be set out until May or later.

More effective in controlling the form a plant will take is the technique known as "pinching" or removing with your thumbnail the growing tip of the plant. This encourages the lower buds on the stem to develop and so makes a shorter, more compact plant with many more flower-bearing stems.

A pinched plant has greater stability, too. Most garden varieties will not need staking if pinched at three- to four-week intervals until the end of July. In contrast to leggy, unpinched plants, which tend to fall flat or spread out like spokes in a wheel when the wind blows, pinched chrysanthemums have been known to come through severe storms without damage.

MOST gardeners who have had some experience with chrysanthemums like to combine another technique with that of pinching. By "disbudding" or removing all but one select flower bud at the top of a stem they channel the plant's energy into making fewer, but much larger, flowers.

The traditional football chrysanthemum is grown this way, and, while it takes great care to produce flowers of florist's perfection in the garden, there are large-flowered varieties which respond satisfactorily to amateur efforts. You might try growing a few disbudded spider or anemone chrysanthemums for cut flowers while you get the hang of this technique.

Because they are by nature vigorous, flexible plants, chrysanthemums are sometimes trained into special forms to fill particular needs in the landscape. Basically, whether they are grown as cascades, as shown on page 220, as short-lived bonsai, trees or screens, the plants are disciplined into shape by a combination of the two simple techniques, pinching and disbudding.

Nowadays chrysanthemum enthusiasts believe in growing their plants "fast" without the traditional drying or hardening periods which were once thought necessary. From rooted cutting to flowering plant, everything possible is done to develop quickly a fine quality plant with crisp green leaves all down the stems.

While chrysanthemums will grow in any soil which yields good vegetables, it usually pays home gardeners to give most of their efforts to increasing the humus content of their soil. More than anything else, chrysanthemums are apt to be held back by a lack of moisture in the soil. By working in peat or other organic material as deeply as possible, the condition of the soil is improved and more moisture will be held available to thirsty plant roots. Good drainage is absolutely essential, however, especially where chrysanthemums sometimes winter-kill. Don't set your plants in a bog or in hollows where water collects.

Once they have begun growth, chrysanthemums should never be allowed to dry out. Even a single, brief wilting will cause stems to become hard and woody. Future growth will be inhibited and flowers may be fewer and smaller. As with other plants in the garden, one heavy watering of chrysanthemums is more beneficial than daily sprinklings. You can conserve moisture with a one-inch mulch of peat or similar material applied when the plants are six inches high.

BECAUSE they are such leafy, vigorous plants, chrysanthemums tend to use food, as well as water in rather large amounts. However, it's easy to overfeed chrysanthemums, so don't overdo it. The average garden soil will need no more than a monthly application of a balanced plant food, begun once the young plants have become established. On sandy soils, or where there are

As a novelty, you might try training a limber, small-flowered chrysanthemum along a branch, stone or driftwood set in the plant's container. Select two or three of the strongest shoots and encourage them to grow in desired directions with temporary ties and by removing side shoots until time to let flower buds develop.

Can We See Ourselves As Clearly As Others See Us?

Next month, the entire November issue of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL will be devoted to a "Report to the World on How Americans Live"! So important—and impressive—is this November issue that it will be distributed abroad, by the thousands, through the United States Information Agency.

But the November issue does not address Europeans or Asians.

It is a direct report to America on:

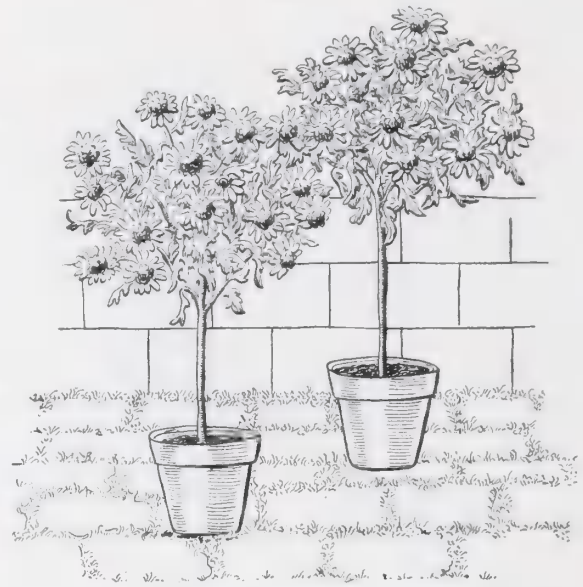

- the new civilization that is America
- the new spirituality in our handsome homes
- the new wisdom in our mastery of the 20th Century

We shall show step by step, in every room of the house—kitchen, living room, bedroom and garden, too—the fulfillment of the democratic dream: an entire nation freely and intelligently enjoying an abundant life.

From a ready-built $12,000 house to two of the latest and finest by Frank Lloyd Wright, the November issue of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL will show all this in rich color, full plans and complete detail. There will be major articles on the new cultural revolutions in cooking, in music and popular reading, on how everybody can own a house in America, on the new and wonderful world that is truly America.

Don't miss the November issue of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL. Reserve your copy now at the newsstand.

If you have a greenhouse or sunny window and a taste for attentive gardening, you can train chrysanthemums into small trees. Trick is to get a stem as tall as the desired "tree trunk" (by keeping side shoots removed) by spring planting time so that from then on you can let selected shoots from top develop into flower-laden branches. Single or small anemone-flowered kinds are best for this purpose.

heavy rainfalls to wash away the nourishment before plant roots can use it, more frequent feedings will be needed.

Chrysanthemums step by step

Propagation: The simplest way to start chrysanthemums is with young plants or rooted cuttings purchased from a nursery. Plant them whenever they are available, making certain, if they are plants, that you are getting young, vigorous growth, not hardened leftovers which dried out or wilted earlier in the season.

Rooted cuttings can be planted directly in their final containers or placed in the garden. The old practice of potting up cuttings and nursing them along for several weeks before planting has been found to slow up and limit growth. Just plant, slightly deeper than before, water thoroughly and shade them from the sun for a few days.

Plants which bloomed the previous year should be divided in spring when new shoots are six to twelve inches high. Shake the lifted clump of roots gently and separate the brittle, thick-stemmed outer shoots. These outside shoots, with their strong, newly formed roots, will make new plants. Discard the tired center of the clump.

No division should have more than three shoots when replanted, as crowding induces legginess and dying of the lower foliage. A plant with just one shoot will make a handsome, rounded specimen. Size of the plants at maturity depends upon both the variety involved and the training which it will get, but for plants set in the ground the spacing should be at least 18 inches apart.

Chrysanthemum cuttings root in about three weeks and are preferred to divisions by those with a greenhouse. When shoots on the old plants are about six inches high, cuttings are snapped or cut from them and planted shallowly in flats of moist sand or vermiculite. No leaves need be removed, but the cuttings should be shaded slightly until they have begun to root. Cuttings make more shapely, uniform plants, and, of course, many more of them than divisions, but the home gardener may prefer the ease of making divisions.

Pinching: When the young plants or rooted cuttings are set out they should be pinched back to five or six inches of growth. If you have chosen small flowering varieties (singles, pompons, small anemones), resulting branches should be pinched at three- to four-week intervals until the end of July.

Nowadays, commercial growers feel it is better to pinch plants back just 1/4 to 1/2 inch at a time.

taking only the very small growing tip, rather than cutting back into the hardened stem. They have found that new growth comes quicker by this method. This means you must pinch promptly, before the plants get too tall, if you are to prevent legginess.

Too few people realize the importance of pinching chrysanthemums in producing an attractive plant covered with flowers.

If time is a crucial factor and you have many plants to be pinched, just trim their tops with pruning shears when the plants are a foot or so high. You'll get a few stubs and torn leaves by this method, but new growth will soon cover them and the final effect will more than make up for the temporary roughness of the plants.

If, however, your plants are of large flowering varieties which you want to grow to their maximum size (exhibition, spider, spoon, large anemones), allow only three to five stems to develop after the first pinch and then cut them back to two or three leaves. If you then let the resulting stems grow at will, but keep all side buds removed (disbudding), you'll produce a plant with one large flower on each stem.

Pests: Aphids are the most common affliction of chrysanthemums. If these tiny insects begin to swarm over the growing tips of your plants, attack them at once with a spray or dust containing lindane. (You'll find this an ingredient of the newer all-purpose garden preparations.) Left to multiply, these black or green plant lice will cause distorted leaves with light marks and sometimes a sticky honeydew.

In damp, cloudy weather, or where plants are crowded or shaded, mildew may leave its whitish mold on chrysanthemum foliage. Here the best cure is prevention—avoid shade and crowding—but should the problem occur, dust the plants with sulphur or one of the newer mildew preparations. Winter care: When flowers fade and stems become dry or are killed by frost, cut the plants back to about four inches and burn the tops. After the ground has frozen a loose mulch of salt hay, straw, manure or evergreen branches should be spread around the plants, leaving the growing part or crown open. Mulch carelessly left covering the stems may cause smothering of the plant later. Most winter-killing of chrysanthemums is due to poor drainage, heaving and consequent root damage or to killing of new growth in late winter when a break in the weather is followed by severe cold. Mulching will do much to prevent the latter two problems. Soil preparation and location take care of the first.

If you've tried chrysanthemums in the past, only to lose many of your plants during the winter, look for the new hardy kinds which have been developed especially for northern gardeners in Minnesota, New Hampshire and Rhode Island. Grown as indicated here they are proving satisfactory even in Canada. Cascades, espaliers, etc.: For instructions on training chrysanthemums for special purposes refer to "Nine New Ways to Use Chrysanthemums," HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, March, 1954, pages 134-135.

As cut flowers, chrysanthemums are unsurpassed, may last two weeks or more indoors. Large-flowered types such as spider, anemones, and exhibition chrysanthemums are most spectacular, but don't overlook the many decorative uses of smaller singles and pompons.

come into your home with a Steinway

The Steinway 'pays its way' in values that are exclusive with the Steinway. The world's great artists constantly demonstrate these values to their audiences, in the golden tone and sensitive response that only the Steinway yields at their touch.

The Steinway in the home, with its impressive presence, teaches the student music and helps him discover the fun in accomplishing, and the satisfaction in rising above push-button living. The Steinway stresses, in an age of plenty, the values money can't buy—and the values money can. Built to resist depreciation, the Steinway is over the decades the most economical of pianos, and the wisest investment.

- Reduces heating and cooling costs • Minimizes window fogging
- Serves as storm sash in permanent form
- Two types and many standard sizes to choose from

With Twindow—Pittsburgh's twin-glass windowpane with insulation built in—you experience a new and exciting feeling of "at-home" comfort and pleasure. For in picture windows, Twindow lets you enjoy fully the beauties of the outdoors from your easy chair. And in every room in your home, Twindow reduces cold air downdrafts which may affect your family's health.

Moreover, Twindow cuts down window icing and steaming. It keeps rooms quieter by deadening outside noises. It actually saves you money on heating and air conditioning. And, since Twindow is a permanent installation, it provides the most convenient form of storm sash. This means freedom from the twice-a-year chore of putting storm windows up and taking them down.

Made by Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company—a firm that is world-famous for its high-quality, dependable products—Twindow can be relied upon to give your rooms excellent window insulation protection, clearest vision and added beauty.

When you consider all of Twindow's advantages, it is a pleasant surprise to find that its cost is no more than that of single-pane windows plus storm sash. Consult your architect or builder about Twindow and the various types of sash in which it can be used.

IN WARM WEATHER. In summer the extraordinary insulating ability of Twindow seals out much of the outdoor heat which normally enters your rooms. What a relief to stay indoors!

IN COLD WEATHER. The insulating properties of Twindow keep out cold air. Your rooms are more evenly comfortable . . . you have more peace of mind about your family's health.

Winegard "Golden Tone" HIGH-STYLE ANTENNAS

A Miracle Electronic Development.
 Transforms Any Ordinary TV Picture into the Sharpest, Most Brilliant Image You Ever Enjoyed. Eliminates Distracting
 "Ghosts" and Interference Patterns.

Now get amazing performance from any television receiver—black and white or color...any channel...no matter where you live!

Whether you have an old-fashioned antenna, or depend on inside rabbit-ears—this fabulous new WINEGARD antenna will step up performance of your set beyond your expectations. It has to! It's guaranteed to give you better performance, or your money back.

You cannot duplicate WINEGARD performance with any other device. Only WINEGARD has the patented "Electro Lens"* that absorbs even the weakest signal out of the air and focuses it for maximum strength like the lens on a telescope. WINEGARD'S famous Power Pack, exclusive on the Color'ceptor, builds up the weakest signal as much as 47%, blocks out interference, and produces a brilliant picture, free from distortion. High-styled to complement the finest home. Anodized in glistening gold for long life.

Whether you Live Next Door to the Station—or 100 Miles Away
 ... You get Peak Performance on Every Channel!

Don't depend on "proximity" for a good picture. Close-in reception is subject to "ghosts" and patterns caused by reflections and co-channel interference. A WINEGARD antenna eliminates these annoying faults. No inside "gimmick" can substitute for a WINEGARD because you've got to go outside to get an outside signal.

PERFECT BLACK AND WHITE RECEPTION NOW
 ... A NECESSITY FOR "COLOR" WHEN YOU WANT IT!

SNOW—Means weak signal. A WINEGARD Color'ceptor with Power Pack gets rid of snow fast!

GHOSTS—Caused by reflected signals from buildings or inside walls. A WINEGARD blanks out reflections.

Install-It-Yourself!

Several models of WINEGARD antennas are available as complete factory-assembled units. Nothing else to buy. Nothing to put together—just snap it open like an umbrella, and nail it up. All you need is a hammer and 5 minutes time. Priced from $17.95.

Why you need more than one thermostat in your house

The way you use your rooms

With a separate thermostat controlling the living area, you can adjust the temperature according to your desire. When you're entertaining a large crowd the living room doesn't get too warm. You simply turn down the heat here in the winter or turn up the cooling in the summer.

The sleeping zone thermostat makes it possible to set the temperature there according to use. If the bedroom areas are empty, or if you want cool sleeping, you can adjust this thermostat—and get the lower temperature you want.

The way the weather affects your house

In winter the north wind and southern sun are far more important than most people realize when it comes to making sure your whole house is comfortable.

On a blustery winter day you can turn up the thermostat on the north side of the house and compensate for the chilling effects of the wind.

And when solar heat from the winter sun comes through your windows, the thermostat on the south side will keep sun-drenched rooms from overheating.

The way your house is built

Such features as fireplaces, glass walls, picture windows and the special characteristics of your floor plan present problems which make it impossible for a single thermostat to give you over-all comfort.

Fireplaces add heat you should compensate for. Glass walls and picture windows let in solar heat during the day, are a major source of heat loss at night.

A basement game room, below ground, needs a separate thermostat for real comfort.

The comfort you want

In living area.

No matter whether you're spending a quiet evening at home—or have a house full of company—Honeywell Zone Control keeps the temperature just right.

In sleeping area.

Your children can sleep cool, even in the early evening hours when you want the rest of the house warm for adults.

In recreation area.

Part-time rooms can be kept at low, fuel-saving temperatures when not in use, and made comfortably warm by a finger-tip adjustment of the thermostat when you're entertaining.

Honeywell Zone Control lets you enjoy the heating or cooling you want, when and where you want it.

Your architect or contractor can tell you about zoning for the house you plan to build. To zone your present home, consult your heating dealer.

Excitingly new...storage walls by Place Homes

Adjust-a-bilt wall spline method by L. A. Darling Co. Photos of House Beautiful's "Guild" home by Place

MASONITE® panels and hidden supports create "useful" walls!

A revolutionary new panel and spline method, used by Place Homes, Inc., of Indiana, provides support for cabinets, fixtures, shelves—yes, even pictures and bric-a-brac. Think of it—walls that change with your living and storage requirements... walls that grow up with your children. (Move the brackets to any desired height.)

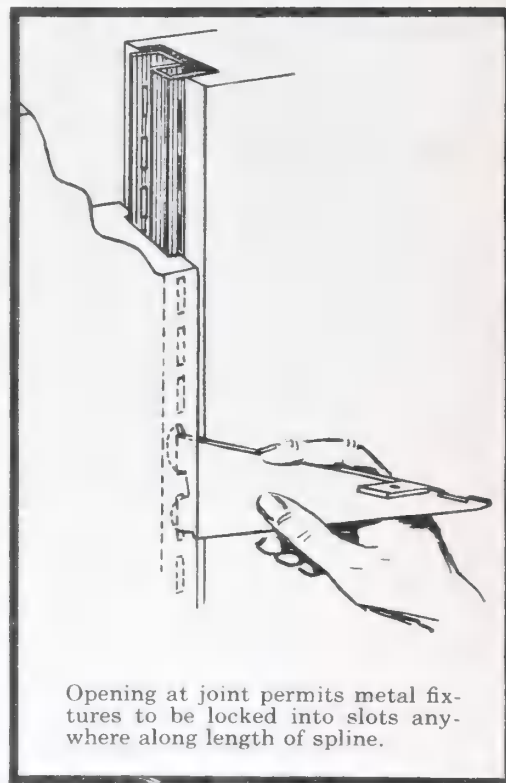

It took Place Homes engineers years to develop a storage wall surface that would withstand impact, bumps, knocks and scrapes. For this surface they chose Masonite Tempered Presdwood®. Dense, durable and rigid, this grainless hardboard never splits, splinters or cracks. It accepts and holds the beautiful finishes that add so much charm to the interior of a home.

Write for further information on Masonite Tempered Presdwood storage walls or metal spline system by L. A. Darling Co.

Masonite Corporation, Dept. HBT-11, Box 777, Chicago 90, Illinois. In Canada: Masonite Corporation, Gatineau, Quebec.

Convenience that fits your kind of living—lets you arrange wall fixtures where you want them—a big advantage of the panel and spline method.

ARCHITECTURAL LIGHTING • RESIDENTIAL FIXTURES • PORTABLE LAMPS

The nicest thing about our Portfolio lamps is this: they have a purpose in life even beyond their fashionable facades. The "Blackout" lamp above, designed by Italy's famed Maurizio Tempestini, is a perfect (and perfectly beautiful) case in point. The revolving shield lets him dream away while you catch up on Vogue. The oil-finished walnut table swings your way or his, too. At left, another example: an elegant vanity mirror with built-in "powder-your-nose" light. It hangs on a hallway wall or saves space on the back of a closet door. The third design lights, itself! There's a dramatic accent light built into the useful walnut table. You'll find these lamps . . . plus many others . . . at fine shops throughout the nation. ## Two decisions young marrieds should make Don't just take our word for the advice we're about to hand you. Check with some of the more successful among your married friends.

The advice is this: buy with the future in mind and don't buy anything just because it's cheap. Start now—on a modest scale if necessary—to collect for yourselves the best in home furnishings. For the best is least expensive in the long run—and so much more satisfying!

Take Gorham sterling, for example. Backed by 125 years of tradition, the name "Gorham" stands for the very finest in solid silver. There are more Gorham patterns to choose from than in any other make—and even years later you know that you can match or add to your service. Yet Gorham costs far less than you imagine.

For instance, you can begin with a teaspoon in your favorite Gorham pattern. Prices start at only $3.75*. A complete place-setting (knife, fork, spoon, salad fork, soup spoon and spreader) comes as low as $29.75*. Most authorized Gorham jewelry and department stores have convenient budget plans which give you as long as a year to pay.

One other thing—don't forget to register your pattern with the store. This way, you'll be certain of receiving more of your own Gorham Sterling on gift-giving days throughout the years.

DECORATOR'S DIARY

Ideas and inspirations noted

by a decorator as she covers the home furnishings showrooms in search of the new and worth while

Contrary to general opinion, little girls are the bane of a decorator's existence. They know what they want, and it's usually so flamboyant that it takes a lot of velvet-glove maneuvering to make them happy with something sensible. Little boys, on the other hand, let you do pretty much as you please, once you're over the big hurdle of convincing them that they'd better clean out the birds' nests and let you go to work before the Board of Health gets after them.

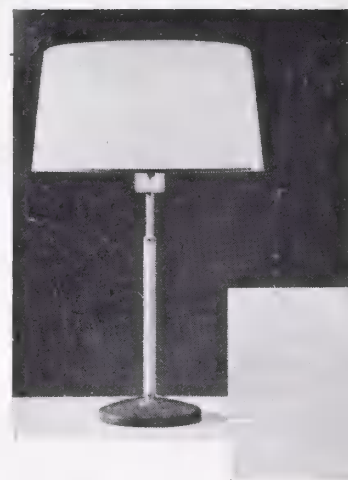

David Duffy, a ten-year-old tough guy whose original attitude toward the whole thing was expressed in a bored "who needs it?," could hardly keep his poker face stiff when he saw the baseball-patterned drapery fabric we got from Greeff and the Englander trundle bed which we covered in dark green felt. Little does he suspect it, but when he goes off to Lawrenceville a couple of years from now, his room is going to become a study-guest room, so everything chosen now has to be pointed toward that future.

His desk is a long, built-in counter that runs under the windows. We got him a fine armchair and a bookcase, and all was going swimmingly until we tried to find the right kind of desk lamp. It had to furnish plenty of diffused, non-glaring light for homework, of course. It had to be rugged enough for David's habits. And it still had to be good looking enough for the study-guest room.

We made our choice in the Heifetz Company showroom where they have a tremendously useful line of lamps which they call Rotaflex. Rotaflex is the name for a Danish method of processing plastic. The finished product, which can be formed into any number of lamp-shade shapes, all molded in one solid piece, looks as if the plastic had been coiled round and round, like slender strands of spaghetti. The result is an intriguingly textured plastic shade which looks more like pressed glass than the tough stuff it is. Surface is slick, but it doesn't seem to attract dust, and is easily washed with soap and water. One of its major features is its high transmission and broad diffusion of light without the hot spots and glare that cause eye strain. Shades come in many colors, some translucent, some clear, and some in colorful combinations.

David's lamp, which stands 25" high on a round, oil-finish walnut mounting, has its brass stem wrapped in Rotaflex as well as a Rotaflex shade. The shade, 15" in diameter, is one solid piece, molded without a top opening so that light is diffused upward as well as through the sides of the shade. The light operates three ways.—M. G.

America's love

The passion and pastime of mid-century America is now music. It speaks eloquently of the depth and breadth of our cultural revolution

Rivalling the great Greek theater of the ancient world is the natural Theater of Red Rocks, just west of Denver, where 8,600 sit between sky-towering rocks and twilight-changing sky to hear music and see plays.

affair with music

By RICHARD WILLIAMS

Baseball is said to be America's greatest pastime. Yet Americans spend more money on concert tickets than they do on baseball games. In 1953, they laid down $45,000,000 to listen to serious music, while organized baseball, both major and minor leagues, took in $40,000,000 at the box office.

However, neither statistics nor box-office figures and sales records for phonograph discs and for musical instruments—all of which are astronomical—can explain the extent of the musical revolution in American life. For this we must penetrate deeper in time and space, if ever we are to understand our absorbing love affair with music.

Obvious reasons for our heightened interest in music can be adduced—the wide spread of prosperity, increased leisure time and a general lifting of the cultural level. But in addition, there occurred in our recent history a turn-about in our attitude toward music so decided that only the word revolution seems proper.

At the turn of the century fifty-six years ago, one could truly say that the business of America was business. It is still largely true, of course. In the young years of (Please turn to page 44) the 20th century the Victrola did a fair job of getting good music around and people collected records with pride and care. Pianos had not yet disappeared (to reappear in our own time) and there were well-attended band concerts in almost every town.

AMERICA'S LOVE AFFAIR WITH MUSIC

But as the century grew older, the matter of music became less important. To a considerable extent it became the possession of the man who had already arrived; it was a social asset, much like antique furniture. Opera was for those who could afford a box at the Metropolitan. To the average citizen musicians and concert-goers were a group apart, a little foreign, a little embarrassing to meet first-hand. They were "artistic." And today it is difficult to remember how much contempt was once contained in that word artistic.

NOW, these conditions, of course, were never black and white, and we must not assert, in smug satisfaction with the present day, that America some decades ago was bare of musical interest. A great deal of music, and very good music, was played, and many people listened to it in all sincerity and joy, without a thought of using it as a social ladder. Some music was taught in the universities. Many of our major musical institutions, the orchestras of New York, Philadelphia and Boston, are more than fifty years old. In social history we must allow exceptions and speak of conditions in broad terms.

It is nonetheless true that as late as the 1920's the young executive of a furniture factory in Michigan would assiduously cultivate his golf game and would try to learn to play auction bridge from Sidney Lenz, but would not pay very much attention to Beethoven. If he did, he might have hidden his interest from his friends in the locker room.

Then things changed. Perhaps it began with the great depression of the early thirties, when Americans learned to turn inward for spiritual solace and found resources for it in literature, art and music. In any event, the big change has really occurred in the past ten or fifteen years. Today men who listen to Brahms or Bartók are no longer considered odd in their tastes.

The young boy who wants to play the violin is no longer considered an introvert requiring some special talking to. If he wants to become a violinist, he may not receive the whole-hearted enthusiasm of his father, but he is recognized as having a legitimate goal in life.

Virtuosos are no longer hailed in the manner of circus performers, "the greatest," "the most sensational," as were Paderewski and Caruso. Even lesser performers have found their place in American cultural life.

What has occurred, then, has been a change in the average man's attitude toward the once dubious domain of music. It has become important to him and so, without getting philosophical about it, he insists on having it, almost, one might add, to excess. Today there is music to be heard from morning to night, at home, in restaurants, in railroad stations, in automobiles—everywhere.

The machine-reproduction of music has multiplied it a million-fold. From about 1930 on, you could turn a knob and flood your living room with music. On the radio, generally, this music would consist of the latest "pop" hit, a raucous voice followed by a raucous commercial. But there were enough programs of good music available to tempt a public receptive to it. In the heyday of radio, virtually all the good orchestras were regularly on the air, and several radio stations came into being to live exclusively for and by music. Now, in the change-over period, with radio sinking and color-television rising, radio stations, impoverished and uncertain of their course, rely almost exclusively on recordings. Television is beginning to pay some attention to music, particularly to opera. It will pay more attention in the future.

IN THE last seven years the growth of the recording industry has been astonishing. It has spread music to new homes with a speed and enthusiasm that nobody has foreseen, least of all the manufacturers who made the records. In 1949, recording on magnetic tape was made practical and new, better records were developed. Not only were they better, they were cheaper.

While other forms of entertainment increased in cost, recorded music tumbled in price, so that today one can buy Beethoven's Symphonies Nos. Five and Eight on one LP for $4.00, not to mention the price-cutting which brings the cost of about an hour's worth of music to $2.00 and less. One supermarket (Please turn to page 209)

Your grandmother never dreamed of such a thing ... lovely china Pepper Mill Sets by Lenox

In grandmother's day, a pepper mill, heaven forbid, just had to be ugly as a butter churn, a flatiron, or a plow!

You'll really wish grandma could see you, with your good-looking table settings, your exquisite Lenox China, your pretty table linens, your charm and candlelight. And most marvelous of all, your graceful new Lenox China Pepper Mill Set. Wonderful gifts. Perfect for you and yours. Heirloom pieces for today—and years to come.

AGED LIKE VINTAGE WINE (Smoking alone takes 30 days!)

VIRGINIA HAM

NEARLY 300 years ago, Virginia colonists sent to England hams of a distinctive savory flavor that soon were acclaimed by gourmet and royalty throughout the capitals of Europe. Both the fame and famous flavor have endured. Today, as then, the true Virginia ham is one of the world's delicacies.

Each magnificent ham now hanging in our aging rooms, slowly cured, smoked to a rich mahogany hue, aged approx. one year, has been tended by hand through each unhurried step—as we have done for the past 116 years. These carefully selected hams are put down in dry salt in cool cellars for 25 to 45 days, and turned often. The salt is removed and the ham allowed to mature for three weeks. Next it is rubbed by hand with a thick coat of black pepper. Then it goes into the smokehouse to hang for 30 days and nights over hand tended fires, until the juices drip and the dense, pungent hickory smoke permeates and flavors the meat. Then to darkened aging rooms, to hang for months.

And finally, just before shipment, each ham (in a 40-hour process) is soaked, simmered, the skin removed, the fat trimmed, then glazed with sugar and baked with wine to a savory feast of firm, sweet and tender meat.

Your Jordan's ham arrives ready to be enjoyed, needs no heating. It keeps for weeks and weeks. Traditional for Christmas dinner... perfect for cocktail party or buffet.

Sealed in amber cellophane, nestled in burgundy tissue in Old Virginia Smokehouse box (carving, serving and keeping suggestions enclosed), here is a magnificent gift for those you especially wish to please this year, and a grand treat for your family.

Our hams are prepared to please discerning people, and we guarantee complete satisfaction. Weight 8 to 13 lbs. cooked; $1.89 per lb. (net cooked wt.) shipped anywhere in continental U.S. Please specify whether wanted now; for Christmas; or other date.

*THIS FABULOUS

... is replaced if it breaks!

We asked designer Ben Seibel to create a true china that would add an informal grace to modern dining. We asked him to do it in the Iroquois manner: durable, practical, beautiful, unbelievably low priced. He gave us Impromptu — a lustrous translucent china molded in softly sculptured curves. We fired an amazing toughness into Impromptu. It is Sunday best china that can be used and enjoyed every day.

Impromptu is so durable we'll replace any piece that breaks within a year* — so practical you can cook, bake and serve in the serving pieces. Its seven colorful patterns always retain their freshness, even when they meet the acid test of dishwasher detergents. A 16-piece starter set, service for 4, retails from $14.95 to $18.95.**

* In accordance with warranty.

** Slightly higher in the west.

the BIRDS

Composed and arranged by Jim Fasset... Musical Director of CBS Radio Hear, for the first time, a symphony played, not with instruments, but with actual bird songs! Composed by Jim Fasset and painstakingly "played" by using bird calls at various speeds, just as a composer selects various instruments to play certain passages. It's a must for bird-lovers and music-lovers! Originally aired by Mr. Fasset on one of his regular Sunday programs on CBS Radio. Side B, "A Revelation in Birdsong Patterns," gives you thirteen different bird songs, each followed by the same song treated to bring out the astonishing configurations of its hidden musical patterns. Long-playing (33 1/3 rpm) 12" record.

This Christmas — give A GIFT-THAT-GROWS

ONLY $1 DELIVERED WITH GIFT CARD

10 for $9.50 (95¢ ea.) • 25 for $22.50 (90¢ ea.) • 50 for $44.00 (88¢ ea.)

Here's a delightful, unusual new way to say "Merry Christmas"—give a living gift that brings the lush, vivid beauty of the tropics right into your friends' winter-bound homes! A gift that lives and grows more beautiful through the years... a perpetual reminder of your kindness and affection.

FROM THE FORESTS OF OAHU—THIS LIVING "GOOD LUCK" PLANT

These Hawaiian Aloha Plants begin their long and beautiful lives deep in the volcanic forests on the romantic isle of Oahu. There, amidst the thick clustering orchids and palms, the natives search out their satiny green beauty. Their leaves are much valued as a charm against evil spirits.

Yet, though the Aloha Plant is as much a part of this tropic paradise as the sound of the surf on the gleaming shore, it is so amazingly hardy that it will live and thrive indoors, anywhere in the United States!

EASY TO GROW—NEEDS LITTLE CARE

When your friends receive your exciting ready-to-grow gift, the hardy young Aloha Plant log is covered with a vivid green Pacific Ocean sea moss to keep it moist. It is nestled in its own sparkling silver metallic planter—and attractively wrapped in cellophane. It grows 12" to 15" tall. What a surprise when it comes, with a handsome gift card bearing your name! What a thrill to grow it from infancy... and to watch each lustrous green leaf shoot out and unfurl! Needs little care. Thrives for years.

MONEY BACK GUARANTEE

Every Plant is guaranteed to arrive alive and hardy. It must grow and flourish—your friends must be thrilled... otherwise you will receive a prompt refund.

SUPPLY LIMITED—ORDER NOW!

Because these gorgeous plants are sold directly by mail, you can have them sent to your friends for as little as 88¢ each... for little more than the cost of a fine Christmas card. We expect only one shipment from Hawaii in time for Christmas. Once our limited supply is spoken for, there'll be no more.

Don't miss out on this easy, inexpensive way to delight everyone you know! Just send us your gift list and we'll deliver your lovely living gifts anywhere in the U. S. in time for Christmas... each with a beautiful gift card bearing your name. You will be notified that your Plants have been shipped on time.

offers twelve-inch, long-playing (LP) records of good quality for 99 cents each. Music in prosperous America is less expensive than it is in countries of lower prosperity. In Germany an LP costs about $8.00, in Italy $7.50, and England levies a 60% purchase tax on the wholesale cost of phonographs.

Phonographs also have become better, better styled and reduced in price in the last seven years. They now reproduce music with a truer, more musical sound. Around 1950 Americans became enamoured of "high fidelity." Here was the latest in the pursuit of concert-hall realism and thousands of men began to construct tailor-made sound systems with which they tinkered furiously—occasionally to the disapproval of their wives—and which they invariably claim are better than their neighbor's system. Some, it is true, are more interested in the room-shaking reproduction of a cymbal crash than in a great musical performance, but that phase of high fidelity has passed and interest has returned to recorded music as music. The whole development of recording and phonographs is exercising almost as far-reaching an influence on listening as the invention of the printing press had on reading.

Let us now examine in some detail what this changed attitude toward music, this integration of music into the normal man's life—abetted by technical development—has produced in America.

Symphony Orchestra

Today in 1100 cities and towns some kind of symphony orchestra is playing. (At the beginning of this century there were thirteen orchestras in the United States.) These 1100 include small orchestras, amateurs, semi-professional and professional. Symphonic music is the most popular form of musical entertainment, both live and recorded. To most Americans, listening to "good" music is still synonymous with listening to an orchestra; about two-thirds of all record sales of classical music is "symphonic." We have thirty-two major symphony orchestras, each operating on an annual budget of well over $100,000. The oldest and most highly regarded organizations are the Boston Symphony, the Philadelphia Orchestra, the New York Philharmonic Symphony, which—though its quality has fallen in recent years—is still a superb orchestra, and the Chicago Symphony. All of them are well represented on records and therefore their work is known throughout the world. Impartial European listeners believe that the Philadelphia and the Boston are the two finest orchestras playing anywhere in the world, closely seconded by the London Philharmonia, the Vienna Philharmonic and the Concertgebouw of Amsterdam, all of which in turn are well known in America, thanks mostly to recordings.

Until 1917 orchestras were predominantly German in personnel and leadership; our musical life owes much to such great figures as Theodore Thomas, Frederick Stock and Karl Muck. Since World War I (Charles Münch and Koussevitzky) have been at work. Though several American conductors have come to the fore—Alfred Wallenstein, Thor Johnson, Leonard Bernstein, Robert Shaw—the conductorship of the major orchestra remains international, a healthful and praiseworthy condition. There is little chauvinism in the realm of Brahms, Tchaikovsky and Debussy.

The greatest influence toward giving the orchestra its eminent position was Arturo Toscanini, so much of whose career was spent in America, first with the New York Philharmonic and then with the N.B.C. Symphony. It was his uncompromising zeal which lifted not only the standard of the two orchestras he himself conducted, but the standard of all orchestras. It was he who was the great popularizer of music, in the finest sense of the word.

Koussevitzky in Boston was the conductor most assiduous in introducing new music to us—the modern, the unusual and the untried—and he helped give our taste the catholicity it now possesses. These men engendered an enthusiasm which still nourishes us and which keeps our love for orchestral music fresh and lively.

Where Is the Money Coming From?

American orchestras—as indeed all orchestras—operate at a deficit. They have a difficult time making both ends meet. Costs are going up and the fight for existence becomes ever more difficult, even if the houses are sold out and the recordings sell well. Several of the orchestras, notably Boston and Chicago, are well endowed: To them money is available which was set aside by wealthy people when they were still wealthy. Now it is difficult to raise large contributions from a few people, and the orchestras attempt to get small sums from a large number of friends and subscribers. Fund-raising is constantly going on; all sorts of schemes for passing the hat around are always being concocted. Some support is being extended by industrial organizations. In Detroit, for example, 70% ($375,000 per year) of the money required is raised by Detroit industry; in Indianapolis, 55% ($72,000). Industry-sponsored concerts are presented free to employees and schools.

OUR Federal government does virtually nothing for the support of music. We have no system in our country comparable to the British Arts Council. But Americans are by no means sure that they want Federal aid for the arts. They deeply suspect government's role in the arts. Many of them feel that the government would prove to be a more dubious benefactor than the king of the Eighteenth Century, who supported a theatrical group for his private entertainment. The Musicians' Union, under the leadership of James C. Petrillo is understandably plumping for aid.

Get together a group of people interested in music and you can always start an argument about this subject. Few people, however, debate the desirability of local help by city or community. Some such help is forthcoming in one form or another. Boston gets tax exemption on its property, in return for which it gives a series of free summer concerts. Philadelphia gets a donation of fifty thousand dollars a year from the city. Baltimore, which nearly had to shut up shop last year, is promised a subsidy from the legislature this year. Help is being offered also by the great charitable foundations. This is an old American tradition, a tradition harking back to "the man who left money to pay a band to march around his grave once a year." As early as 1859 George R. Peabody endowed the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore. In 1919 the great Juilliard Foundation was established, which supports the Juilliard School of Music, issues commissions for music, and supports various types of musical festivals. In the same year George Eastman established the Eastman School of Music in Rochester; in 1924 Mary Curtis Bok started the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia, considered the finest school for professional musicians.

THE Carnegie Corporation has given considerable sums to music, buying organs, recording equipment for the Library of Congress, etc. The Rockefeller Foundation's largest grant went to the Louisville Orchestra ($400,000) for the commissioning of new works by American composers. (This has not worked out too happily. Money does not necessarily produce good art, although good art cannot live without money—a fact conceded by everyone.)

Many of the smaller foundations take part in musical development. Only the Ford Foundation has not contributed directly to music. But from one source or another, money for music is forthcoming, more each year as our affection for music continues to grow. It is rather difficult to raise it, but it is being raised.

Music in the Schools

Here the most startling, the most heartening, the most significant change, has taken place, particularly in the last twenty years. Right after World War I, seven hundred thousand children were receiving some kind of musical instruction in public schools. Last year well over seven million children were studying music. The musical curriculum in American schools has expanded both in the importance which is assigned to it and the skill with which it is taught. It would be difficult to find a college which does not have a decent music department. Many of the leading colleges have superb music schools, having attracted teachers from all over the world.

The liveliest kind of music-making goes on in the universities. Here is where chamber music is played, opera workshops function, where even modern music is given a little house room, where both the ancient madrigal and the new progressive "cool" jazz can exist side by side, and where students put on the stage both Mozart's little opera, The Impresario, and Menotti's Amahl (196 performances of Amahl last year). called "the disciplined amateur."

In the lower grades of the public schools we now frequently find a full-time music teacher employed, who encourages the playing of instruments, trains the kids for choral singing and leads them to musical love. Children's concerts, often given with school co-operation, are popular with the kids.

The school band is a truly American phenomenon. There are today approximately seventy thousand bands in our high schools and colleges, and fully nine million boys and girls who tootle and blow and bang the brasses. Lustily they march ahead! To be sure, some of these bands are capable of nothing much more than playing the rah-rah stuff at a football game. But many bands can and do play a wide repertoire of music and play it with considerable virtuosity. The band is part of the social life of the school; it is the young people's club-life in music. Americans young and old love a club, a get-together.

The Opera

Here a process of democratization has taken place. As I have in-dedicated, opera is no longer a white-tie-and-tails function; it is no longer the habitat of the lorgnette society. (Little of "Society" remains in America.) I have seen girls in slacks at the Metropolitan—which is rather overdoing "democratization." But opera performances have not increased in the same degree that symphonic concerts have.

There are still in this whole country only two major opera companies functioning regularly, the Metropolitan Opera and the San Francisco Opera. We have nothing comparable to opera in Italy, a country where opera is indigenous and where a medium-sized city can support an opera season of its own with less than stellar talent and less than artistic excellence. (The perfectionist demand for artistic excellence can be a handicap.)

Both the Metropolitan and the San Francisco Opera use international stars, the "nationally advertised" brand of singer. The Met is proud of its sold-out houses, but there isn't so much to be proud of. The Met plays in the same old house which served New York some seventy years ago, when New York was half the size it is today. So, why shouldn't it be sold out? The City Center Opera, a second opera company in New York, started with great artistic vitality, but has run into organizational problems in recent years. Now, under the new leadership of Erich Leinsdorf, it may overcome these problems.

What holds opera back? Mainly costs. These are enormous, far greater even than symphonic concerts, because the cost of stagehands and scenery must be added to the cost of musicians and singers.

Full-length recordings of opera are now very much in demand; indeed, opera makes up the second largest segment of serious music sold on records. So Americans do like opera, though their preference centers on relatively few works, mostly Italian. Verdi and Puccini are the two favorites. Wagner's popularity has suffered a decline.

A Nation of Passive Listeners

The accusation is made that we like music handed to us on a silver platter, cooked to a turn by the virtuoso, that we do not make music ourselves. There is some justice to this charge: In our first delight with the machine, records and radio, amateurs ceased to play.

These conditions are changing, however. Now, very recently a distinct trend is noticeable toward self-made music. Sales of musical instruments are again increasing, after a period of doldrums. The small piano, the modern streamlined version of the old ugly upright, is well liked. Its price is moderate, its tone adequate for home use, and every year more of them are sold. The new electric organs have entered many homes because they can be played with little skill and yet sound eloquent. New methods of teaching these instruments have been suggested by music educators, in the vanguard of whom is Dr. Robert Pace of Columbia University.

The piano is still the country's most popular musical instrument. Recently quite a few people have taken up simple instruments such as the recorder (recorder societies have been formed in many towns), the accordion and the guitar. Men in the professions—doctors and lawyers—are organizing private chamber music groups. For the first time in years, many Americans are lifting their voices in choral singing, even outside the church.

American Music, from Jazz to Symphony

Much serious music is being written in America today. Many composers of high ideals are at work. Since they are quite unable to make even the barest living out of composing, all of them either perform or, more frequently, teach at the universities. Such composers as Peter Mennin, Leonard Bernstein, Samuel Barber, Aaron Copland, Roger Sessions, Norman delo Joio and Gian-Carlo Menotti enjoy international reputations. American serious music now veers away from the acerbic, the atonal, the convoluted Germanic style of Schonberg and Alban Berg, a style which was influential ten years ago. American composers are no longer ashamed of a melody, provided they can think of a good one. They are no longer as intellectually aloof as they were when they propounded twelve-toned conundrums. They are no longer afraid of popularity. Their compositions get a hearing.

The really strong music of America is its popular music. Here America has created its own style, often commercial, often vulgar, but still, when good, convincing and charming. In musical comedy we are uniquely adroit and getting better all the time. Listen to the scores of Oklahoma!, or of Damn Yankees, The Most Happy Fella or My Fair Lady, to mention only the latest successes. (Do we have in musical comedy a new form of American opera?)

In the last five years jazz, modern jazz, very different from the old New Orleans plaints, has found enthusiastic audience. Jazz represents a performer's art, not a composer's. It remains to be heard whether jazz will produce music of enduring value. American jazz now seems to be Europe's most popular modern music as well.

American Taste

We do not like everything. But then, as Oscar Wilde has observed. "It is only an auctioneer who can equally and impartially admire all schools of art." Our tastes are no more restricted than other nations', and it is probable that the audiences of San Francisco are as open-minded as the audiences of Vienna. American predilection follows two directions: first, romantic music, then, colorful music, lushly orchestrated, the kind of music which sounds good on a high-fidelity phonograph. This leaves Haydn and Handel out in the cold, while Ravel, Debussy, Richard Strauss and Berlioz are in the ascending phase. Chopin and Tchaikovsky, romantic composers, are steadily popular. It is to be expected that we should cherish a special fondness for Gershwin, a fondness which shows no sign of surfeit. Mozart's silvery music has only lately achieved wide appreciation. Beethoven, for us, is the sun around which the planets move.

IT IS significant that even the government is becoming aware of the importance of our musical achievement. (How we have changed our views, reversed our suspicions, fanned indifference into pride!) With the blessings of the State Department, many American musicians and musical ensembles are now traveling the world to show what we are capable of. So the Robert Shaw Chorale goes to the Middle East, the Boston Symphony to Scotland, Porgy and Bess all over Europe, and the Symphony of the Air to Japan.

Refrain

Perhaps some Americans take music too casually. The very ease with which it is available presents a danger of treating music as if it were bath water, to be poured out and lollid in. One of our national diseases seems to be our fear of silence. There is music everywhere to drown out silence, in the bank when we change our money, in the bus station, in the hamburger joint where the juke box is blaring away, and even in the hotel elevator.

But once we step out of this twilight zone of music, we are in a region of real and genuine enthusiasm, of a passion for music seemingly unparalleled, of a love that is honest and youthful, of an ardor that is almost militant. It is possible that the claim of being the most musical nation in the world is justified. In fifty years millions have learned to enjoy, thousands have learned to know, at least some phase of music. Converts turn up every year. He who writes the report for this magazine in the year 2056 may well be able to record that new and fine works, enduring compositions, have grown out of this enthusiasm and have been given to the world by an America which has already become musically vigorous.

How to visit the future

Dear Ingrid:

So you are finally coming to visit the United States! Welcome! I only wish you could bring the whole world with you. Indeed, I wish all Americans could travel our country with you, because our country is so big and many-faceted that even we have trouble digesting it. I have been giving a lot of thought to your question—Where shall I go to see the real America?

The most meaningful sightseeing you can do in America is to observe the way we live daily and nightly. It seems to me that the great difference between our country and the rest of the world is that America has been the first to achieve the freedom from human drudgery that was promised 200 years ago by the industrial revolution.

Other countries have mechanization and material wonders, too. But here they usually seem to work to increase the beauty and dignity of life, not for a few, but for the millions. I think you might even regard our lives as a glimpse into your own future. For I am convinced that a democratic industrialism means a better life for all people, everywhere. With this issue House Beautiful ends its 60th year of publication and enters on its 61st. To mark this venerable event we have undertaken two assignments which we feel befit such an occasion.

Because the last 60 years have seen such tremendous progress in the maturing of the American ways of life, we thought we, ourselves, might gain fresh perspective on these changes, if we attempted to explain to the rest of the world what it is America now has. So this entire issue is devoted to a "Report to the World on How Americans Live." To make our assignment properly realistic, this issue is being distributed, in sizable quantities, to all other countries of the world.

For Part Two of our birthday celebration we will examine, as we enter our 61st year, the design influences that have been at work in the six decades of House Beautiful's existence. We will try to determine how they have affected our manners and homes today, and how our lives may be shaped as a result in the future. Part Two will appear in the issue of January 1957.

No man need be common .

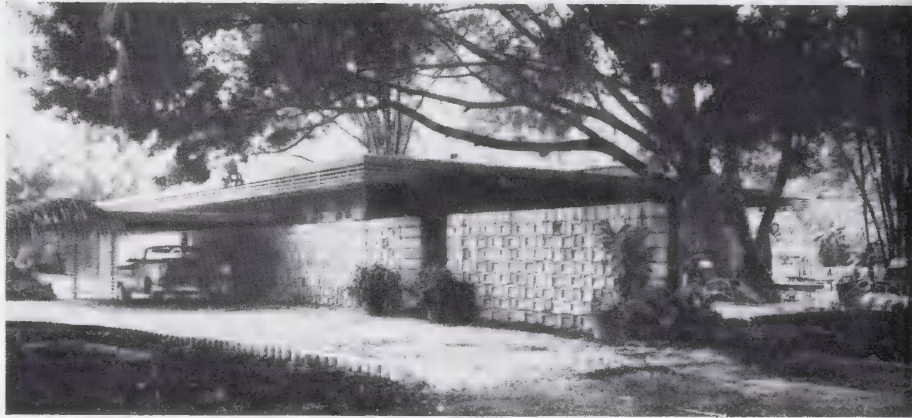

No life need be ordinary

The human test of a civilization, whether European, Asiatic or American, is the quality of the daily life available to its men and women.

In this era of democratic thought, nothing seems truer. Yet for years historians have been judging an age by the way a small leisured class of aristocrats enjoyed itself. And for years critics of America have compared the life of this elite with the life of America's "Common Man."

Obviously their comparison between the monumental palaces and playgrounds of Western Europe and the multitude of small American homes and gardens is unrealistic, if not unfair. However, in greater error is their conception of the American, or any man in a dynamic democracy, as Common. Here they are missing the whole wonderful point of America's experience: Today no man need be common, no life ordinary. As evidence, we offer this home of a man, who sells nothing but his labor (Continued overleaf)

PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

Here is the approaching driveway to the Marko home. The sweeping umbrella-like roof shelters it from Florida's tropical sun and rain. The long low lines integrate it with the ground and fit it snugly under the shade of the trees. To the right is an inviting view of the terrace side of the house, showing its intimacy with the garden. Here truly no man need be "common," nor his life ordinary.

The most remarkable aspect of the architecture of this $22,000 home is the way it opens up so completely to the air, space and greenery of the outdoors, bringing in the beauty of nature and the coolness of the prevailing breeze, making it pavilion-like.

We are looking, here, past the terrace, through the living room and the distant "tree room," toward the other open end of the house. Louvered Persiana doors and an ingenious pair of overhead doors, paneled with translucent plastic, create this openness.

Important to the fine indoor-outdoor relationship of the Marko house is the "tree room." The over-head doors opening it completely to the living room are shown swung up and hooked to the ceiling. They are covered with translucent plastic. A giant Spanish lime tree projects through the roof. Pretty dishes on table cost $6.95 for a 16-piece starter set.

as a house-painter, and of his wife, who practices as a private nurse. They have a joint income of about $6,000 a year. They built this $22,000 house out of many years of savings and with the help of the usual loans.

We will not say that they are typical of America's many or that their house is the average home, but we will say that they are deeply significant of what is happening in the 1950's.

No longer can our critics refer to the "Common Man" of America with a certainty that their reference will be clearly understood or generally accepted. The Age of the Common Man belonged to the first half of America's 20th Century. The Age of the Un-Common Man is now opening before us. More and more our architects, our builders, our designers, our manufacturers, all those who are closest to the new needs and new desires of our millions, are aware of this as a fact to be coped with, not a theory to be argued.

People are aspiring upward in varied and individual ways.

That is the common meaning of the uncommon, untypical, unaverage couple, whose home is before you on these pages, the Markos.

Samuel Marko was born 52 years ago in Russia. He came to America at the age of 18 months. He has had one year of high school and he has gone to night school to study creative writing. He has been a house-painter all his life, but he has been writing, on the whole for his own amusement, as well. He published a novel, "To Struggle, To Laugh," in 1946. It had a small, discouraging (Please turn the page)

The sliding screens have been removed here to better show this well-designed and well-equipped kitchen, which is rapidly becoming typical of even the smallest American home. It is almost equally convenient to the living room, for rare cold-weather dining, as it is to the tree room. Everything is neat and handy. It's a lovely part of an architectural whole.

sale which has failed, however, to discourage him. He is a cheerful, outgoing man who likes more than anything to spread his cheerfulness around him. He gardens now in his spare time, but plans to write a book about his wife, who fascinates him endlessly.

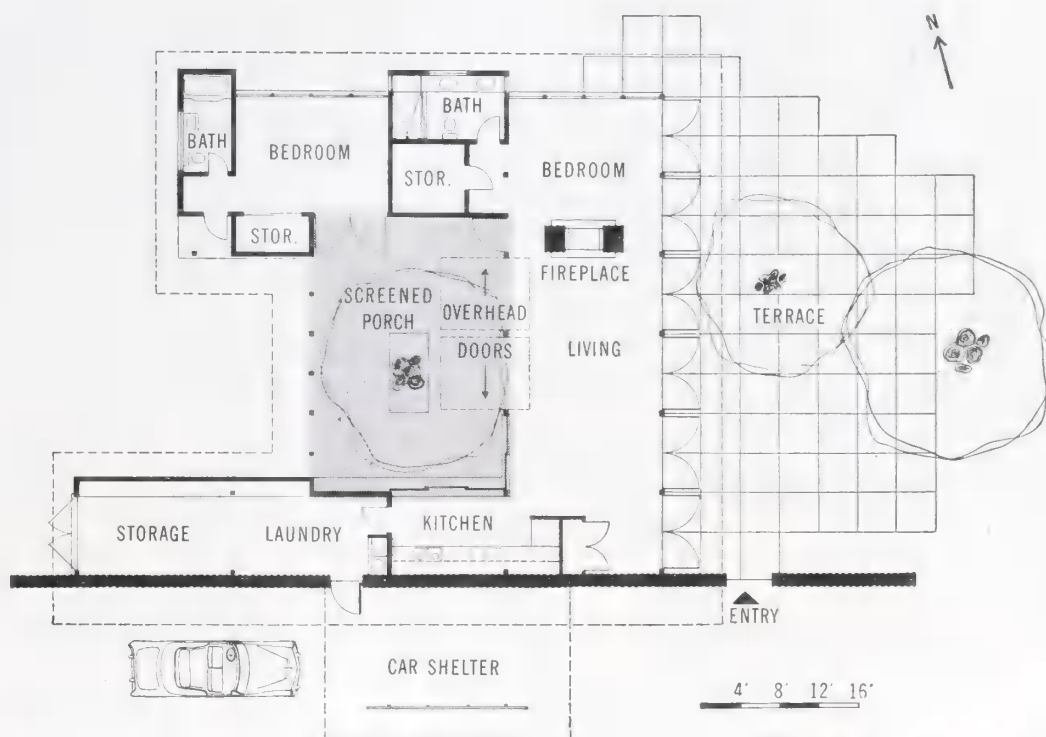

Mrs. Ann Lee Marko was born in Philadelphia of parents born in Russia. (Last August she celebrated her fiftieth birthday in the new home.) She took two years of commercial law to please her father, but really wanted to be a nurse, which she eventually became. She met Mr. Marko when he came to paint a store in Philadelphia of which she was manager and half-owner. They were married nine years ago and moved to Miami, Florida, shortly afterward, to enjoy a life closer to nature.

Mrs. Marko does private-duty work as a registered nurse. She is paid from $14 to $16 a day. Mr. Marko is still a house-painter. This advertisement appears regularly in a local Miami newspaper: Your paint or mine, low estimates, expert work. Insured. FR 1-6688. It is Mr. Marko's.

Above, we are looking from a far corner of the tree room through the living room to the terrace outdoors. Right, we are looking from the fireplace wall through the tree room and its open-air end. Because of Florida's mild winters, the house can be kept open at least ninety per cent of the year.

They jointly earn about $6,000 a year. This means that the income of the two Markos is well within the income range of the vast mass of America's skilled workers. And it means that the house they have just built is not beyond the reach of many others, if they too stretch for it.

It started with Mrs. Marko reading the story of our 1954 Pace Setter House—the Miami home of architect Alfred Parker—particularly an article called, "How to Build the House You Can't Afford." ("The most provocative sentence I've ever read!" she says.)

The Markos had been spending all their week ends (Please turn to page 330)

What is house and what is garden here? Only the closest study will show, for when all doors are open, they are one: house, tree room, terrace and garden. Observe admirable "blow-through" quality necessary for sub-tropical humidity.

A broad, and especially in Russia and Eastern Europe, American capitalism is badly misunderstood and misrepresented, if not from malice, then from ignorance of its nature and unacquaintance with its creative role in achieving a society that is good for all.

What should concern us most, perhaps, is the misunderstanding which capitalism encounters at home in America. Here it is judged with a religious suspicion of its "materialism," an aristocratic suspicion of its "practicality" and an intellectual suspicion of the physical process itself. For instance, Charles Francis Adams regarded American business men with a combination of all these suspicions and described them as "mere money-getters and traders . . . a coarse, realistic, bargaining crowd."

It is not enough to say that Mr. Adams, as a former President of a great railroad, the Union Pacific, was also one of these business men and therefore his criticism is invalid. Such self-criticism verging on self-denigration is symptomatic of our countrymen.

Contrast this depreciation of capitalism by an American capitalist with wise words of an Oriental thinker. I refer to Dr. Hu Shih, a statesman equally well at home in the East and the West. He was born and nurtured in China. Then he came to the United States for his subsequent education. He speaks both languages and understands both ways of life. He was once Chinese ambassador to America. Hear what he has to say about the spiritual potency of our capitalistic "materialism":

"The term materialistic civilization, which has often been applied to stigmatize the modern civilization of the West, seems to me to be a more appropriate word for the characterization of the backward civilization of the East. For me that civilization is materialistic which is limited by matter and incapable of transcending it; which feels itself powerless against its material environment and fails to make the full use of human intelligence for the conquest of nature and for the improvement of the condition of man."

And then turning to a positive characterization of our capitalistic system, he continues:

"On the other hand, that civilization which makes the fullest possible use of human ingenuity and intelligence in search of truth in order to control nature and transform matter for the service of mankind, to liberate the human spirit from ignorance, superstition, and slavery to the forces of nature, and to reform social and political institutions for the benefit of the greatest number—such a civilization is highly idealistic and spiritual."

Men have to have food and other goods to live upon; these have to be produced in some manner: they have to get distributed somehow; and they will be consumed in abundance or meagerness in an atmosphere of hope or of fear. Regarded realistically, there is not an unlimited number of economic systems for doing these necessary things. Now capitalism happens to be the name of one of the general ways of making and distributing goods. (Please turn to page 298)

Everybody can own a house

By WOLFGANG LANGEWIESCHE

An astonishing discovery has recently been made in America in the last ten years. Just as it once turned out that every family could own a car, it now turns out that every family can own a house.

Take the word "every" with a grain of salt, but look around: In the last ten years, a new home has been built for one out of four American (non-farm) households. Most of them have been small single-family houses. Our cities have exploded and sprayed whole counties with small white houses. Many of them have been bought by people who would "normally" (i.e. prewar) have rented. Home ownership has risen from forty to sixty per cent of the population. It's been the biggest change in the looks of the country since the rise of the skyscraper. It may mean the biggest change in American living since Henry Ford.

It's a new method of getting people under a roof. The foreign visitor would be quite startled—it's so profoundly different from what is now the fashion in most countries. The Social Welfare flavor is lacking. It's a business. A builder puts up a whole batch of identical houses—ten, a hundred or a thousand, or even a whole town. He does this on speculation for buyers unknown, and in competition with other "merchant builders" who do the same. You pick your house from their offerings much as you would buy a car. There is no government subsidy, no government control. Anyone may build any number of houses; anyone may buy any house he can afford.

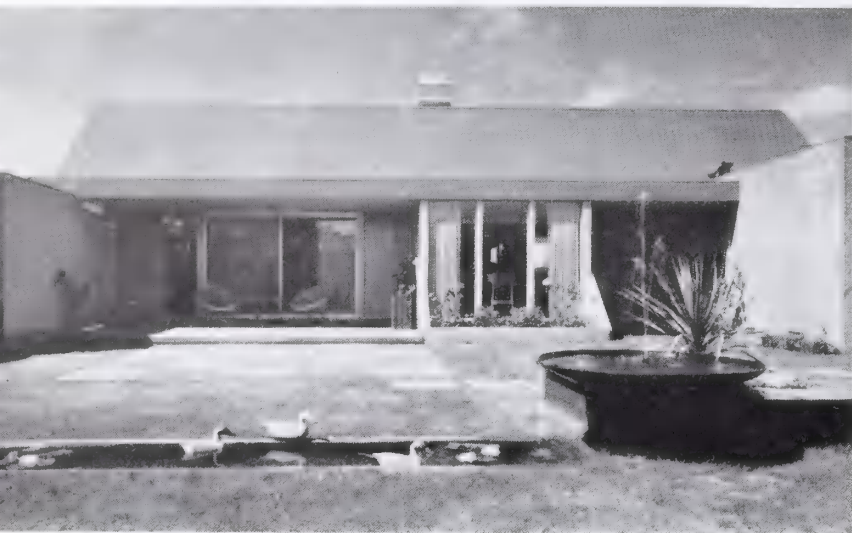

The moment this is said, it has to be shaded a little. No industry operates in a legal vacuum. There is some help for the ex-service man who wants to (Please turn the page) buy a house: he can borrow a little more money than the non-veteran can. But he has to pay it back. There are the usual building codes and zoning ordinances governing construction and land use and development. But that's normal.

Also, there does exist some public housing, welfare-minded, government-subsidized and publicly owned in the European pattern. But there's so little of it, and that little so concentrated in New York City, that it hardly changes the general picture. All told, housing is a business, governed by the self-interest of sellers and buyers. It has been very profitable for the sellers. And the buyers certainly keep coming: a million of them a year sign on the dotted line.

What keeps this going? You can't shrug it off as simple "prosperity." True, the worker who buys the house earns perhaps $100 a week, but the worker who builds the house earns $100. So the mere money factors cancel out. And you can't shrug it off as simply another case of mass production such as is possible only in a country the size of the U. S. It's not yet real mass production. A builder who puts up 100 houses a year is considered Big. No, what keeps this going is an invention, a new mechanism in the field of government: "mortgage insurance."

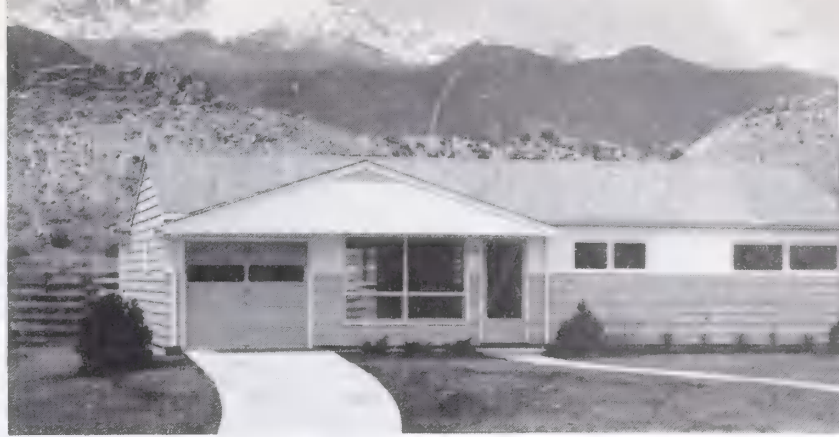

Here's how it works: When you buy a house, you borrow money from the bank as before, but your rich Uncle, name of Sam, signs your mortgage papers along with you. The government insures the lending institution you borrow from against loss in case you default on your loan. But the government's action does not relieve you of your obligation to pay. With the government guarantee strengthening your credit, the bank can lend you money as it never could before—up to 93 per cent of the value of a small house or even, if you are an

6,000 sq. ft. of land

This is how much house can be afforded by a highly skilled mechanic or a junior executive. House encloses around 1,350 square feet of living area and sits on about 6,000 square feet of land. One hundred and sixty of this type have been built in Sunnyside, California, by Gavello, Anshen and Allen, were the architects.

Typical façade of a house that could be owned by a worker's family.

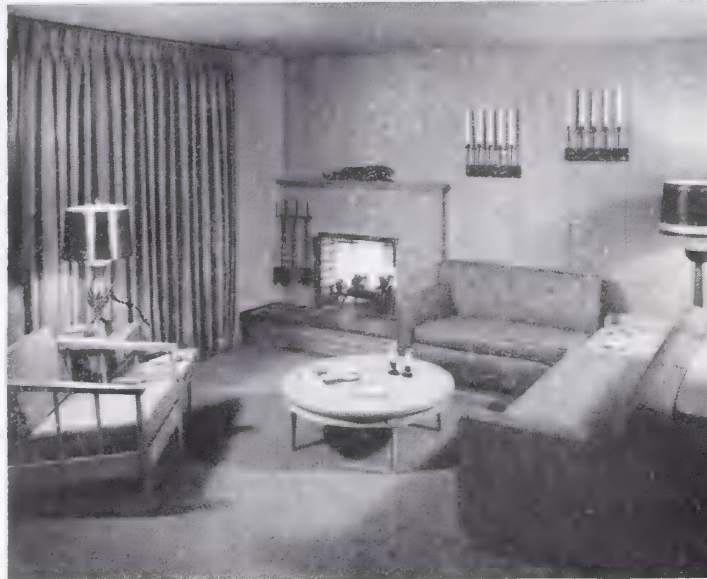

ex-service man, 98 per cent. And the bank can give you 30 years—yes, 30!—to pay back the loan in small monthly installments. That's Mortgage Insurance. That's the idea that has built ten million houses. Better than 50 per cent of all privately owned houses built since 1945 have used this system.

To see what difference it makes, consider what is "normal." It used to be that the highest mortgage loan you could get was two-thirds of the value of the house. That's still so in most countries and in America it's still so for the expensive custom-built house. It's the time-honored way. It worked out fine for the banks, because they could be sure they would get their money back. And there was nothing wrong with it from the viewpoint of the borrower—of those who can become borrowers under that rule.

But it left the Little Man out in the cold. It is almost impossible for an average-income family to save up one-third of the price of a house. The house is too far in the future, and too many needs are pressing right now. Taxes are too high. The shop windows are too tempting, advertising is too powerful. So the two-thirds mortgage forced the Little Man to keep renting, because it put too big a hump right at the beginning of home ownership.

Now that hump is gone. When you go shopping for a house, the actual price is hardly mentioned. "How much is this one?" "$72.50 a month." This includes repayment on the loan, interest on the remaining portion, fire insurance, local taxes. Next in importance—cash required, the down payment. It varies, according to complicated tables, depending on the price-class of the house, the equipment that comes with the house and whether or not you are a veteran. For instance, for a $10,500 Levitt house (see page 332), it may be from $275 to $1,200. This is within people's reach. (Please turn to page 332)

The builder house: what kind of house is it?

By WOLFGANG LANGEWIESCHE

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILLIAM HOWLAND

What kind of house is it one buys on the mass market? It is not one's dream house. On the contrary, it's real. It wants to be judged against the places where people really would live if they didn't live here. That means a city apartment, or "railroad flat," or perhaps doubled-up in a former mansion in some formerly elegant part of town. Compared to what it replaces, the builder house is infinitely better. It's so good that it forever gets compared with the wrong thing.

The builder house is not a villa, nor is the place where it stands a suburb of the twenties, upper-middle-class, genteel and expensive. And it is not "a house in the country." But that is where it gets itself misjudged. Many builder-towns do stand in places whose very names, like "Bucks County," "Nassau County," conjure up country memories from prewar, pre-depression days: Sunday afternoon drives in a Stutz Bear Cat, estates of bankers and brokers, summer theater, the retreats of writers and actresses. Now you drive there and see the former lovely countryside covered with builder houses. Naturally you say, "What a come-down!" Well, maybe so; but it's no come-down for the people living in those houses.

A batch of builder houses all look much alike, though not absolutely alike. In reality a builder uses, say, three roof shapes, three color schemes and three plans which may be merely flop-overs of each other. Then he mixes: one house, Plan A, Roof B, Color Scheme C. Next house, Plan B, Roof C, Color Scheme A. Meanwhile the garage does a sort of dance around the house. First thing you know, it takes mental effort to see, not that they're different, but that they are really alike. Then trees grow up and soften the picture. And one man paints his house a flamboyant yellow, another gray; another grows a hedge; another adds a whole new wing to his house. But there is a sameness to builder-town, there's no denying.

Some people read this as a sign that we are sliding into a time where people look alike, live alike, think alike. But at any given time and place, people of similar occupation and income live much alike. Even Paris apartments or London suburbs or Swiss chalets are, after all, highly uniform. This has never kept free spirits from being free. Just think of a street of builder houses as an apartment house taken apart, and you get rid of such gloomy feelings.

But if you insist on seeing builder-town as a sign of our times, it expresses also a cheerful idea: the very American idea that "You, too, can . . ." You, too, can play the piano, have an education, be beautiful, have a farm, visit Europe, fly, be President, and so on down the list of things which, at other times and places, used to be for the few. This goes through commerce, politics, the schools—through everything. It is the ingredient of the American atmosphere that makes it so energizing: (Please turn the page) anybody can do, have, be anything! It ranges from the ridiculous (you, too, can stay at this exclusive hotel) to the sublime: "Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses yearning to breathe free." Well, here it is: You, too, can live in a house of your own, surrounded by light and air.

Just like the automobile, the house has become a much better product by coming on the mass market. Builder houses are probably more livable, convenient, thought-through than individually built, non-architect-designed houses, average by average. Because a builder sells the same product to many people, the product gets a reputation, just as cars do. If he tucks the furnace into some corner where the repairman can't get at it, it's a well-hidden fault. But of a hundred owners, three find out pretty soon, and word gets around. It's not good for business. A builder gives his house an oversized "glass-wall" type of window that faces west and lets in the hot summer evening sun. Now if one owner would replace some of his glass with a solid panel, he'd be a crank. But if ten owners do it, that's Customer Reaction, and the builder learns his lesson in a hurry. The product improves.

As for looks, well, some are horrible, some very good, and most of them are in-between. The builders can't get too far ahead of popular taste: the houses have to sell. Just as in cars, there is much vulgar "styling." Where the car has its chromium, its various symbols and inscriptions that indicate high price, high power, the high financial standing of the owner, the builder house often has its stone-veneer wall, its cute gables, its unquiet roof-lines—tricks to make it look

This builder's house has what most people would term two living rooms. Here one is called the "family room." This family room is conveniently close to the kitchen and generally furnished more durably than the living room. Many families eat most of their meals in the family room. The supper table pictured on our front cover was photographed in this room and shows the increasingly common kitchen pass-through.

At right is the dining side of the living room. This house has four places for dining, two of them outdoors. Outdoor dining is a tendency with Americans, no matter where they live.

Below is one view of the living room, showing paneled walls of Philippine mahogany plywood which occur also in entry, kitchen and family room. They are an available extra ($300) and could be omitted.

bigger and to suggest that it is after all a rich man's villa in the suburbs. Just as in automobiles the fluffed-up outside somewhat hides the hard solid transportation value inside.

That's where the mass-market has its biggest effect on the house: Just like the car, it has become a much better value. It has become almost irresistible. If you have a house built on your own, it will cost you $15 to $18 per square foot, an average figure that's hard to beat and easy to exceed. To this must be added the cost of land and landscaping, architect's fee, assessments for streets, the cost of connecting up with water and sewers.

Levitt (the man who builds whole towns) delivers at $10 a square foot a house complete with land, all utilities hooked up, streets (Please turn the page) finished and paid for, landscaping, lawn, shrubs and five and one-half trees (eleven trees for every two houses); equipped with two baths, dishwasher, clothes washer and dryer, garbage disposal, air-conditioning. This is exceptional, and to get it you have to live in Levittown, N. Y. or Levittown, Pa., or the coming Levittown, N. J.

But quite generally, the builder house, built by a big-time operator, runs about 25 per cent less than what you could build a comparable house for yourself by "normal" methods.

How can the builder keep the price so low? Many people think he must use shoddy materials and flimsy construction. "Those houses look good now, but they will fall apart before the mortgages are paid off." You hear that often, but it's nonsense. The FHA must accept the house as mortgage-worthy, and it has inspectors. In fact, the workers themselves would talk, if a builder did anything shoddy. "We are like Caesar's wife," says Levitt. "Caesar's wife with private detectives on her tail."

The builder doesn't have to skimp on quality. He simply cuts out waste. An ordinary house contains waste in incredible amounts. It's wasteful in plan, wasteful in structure, wasteful in the way the men put it together. One man builds an expensive wall; the next man expensively breaks a hole through it to put a pipe through. The next day neither of them works because the weather is bad. And there is nothing you can do about it—not as a one-shot customer who is having one house built.

The rule in building has long been: Stick to standard construction. If you figure out a cheaper, more efficient way, it will cost you extra. The contractor is afraid of the complications that might arise from the new method. And he is quite right. Also, he figures he'll have to be on the job himself all the time, supervising his men. Standard construction they can do by themselves. So, to play safe if it isn't standard, he bids extra high.

This is a terrific penalty on change. It has kept building methods frozen, in America at least, for 100 years. The American house of 1950 differed from the house of 1850 mostly in shape and equipment, but not in structure—and very little in the building procedure. You were paying twentieth-century wages for an nineteenth-century type of job. That's where the builder attacks.

You can't break out of this cage, but he can. He can make changes and bull them through. He can afford ten dollars' worth of engineering to cut the cost of a house by one dollar. He builds the house twenty or two hundred times. You'd be surprised how small the gains are that a builder goes after. He cuts out thirty minutes work per window or eight inches of pipe per bathroom. He uses two (Please turn to page 280)

Some people build their own houses with their own hands

By LAURA TANNER

The vast majority of the homes that have been going up at the fantastic rate of more-than-a-million a year have, of course, been built by professionals. But here and there across the country are people who have been building their own homes with their own hands.

Most of these enthusiastic home-builders have sought to build more house for their money by investing their own spare time and energy. Some of them have experienced an incentive over and above the economic one, seeking the thrill and deep satisfaction of using their own hands in the spirit of America's pioneers.

Probably both of these motives inspired the Richard Litseys to build the house on these pages. Economically it meant a house (less architect's fee) which cost them a low $15,800 with an additional $5,500 for the new bedroom and bathroom wing. Their land cost $2,000 for two acres. The value of their property today would be no less than $35,000 with 40 per cent of this measured in terms of the Litseys' own labor.

But theirs is the strong emotional satisfaction, too, of knowing that they created their own home almost from scratch. (Richard Litsey is a pilot with considerable time between flights.) They "let out" only the contracts for lighting (Please turn to page 326)

AMERICA—

Body and Soul

Once Columbus recovered as best he could from the shock of not finding India, he became, perhaps, the best prepared visitor America has known. For he was finally prepared for but one thing: a new world.

A new world! His contemporaries viewed America as nothing less.

We, too, who would discover America must first realize that our country is not a new Spain, a new France or even a new England. No more than it was—or is—a new passage to India.

America is more than ever a new world. It is more distinct from Europe in the Mid-Twentieth Century than it was in the Mid-Nineteenth. But to see this distinction we must learn to see America for what it is, not for what it is not.

There is a new civilization, a new culture, in creation among us. But we'll miss it as completely as Plato missed the Parthenon (did he ever even mention it?), if we keep looking for imitations of older cultures and civilizations.

One trouble with our critics at home, as abroad, is that they continue to look stubbornly for something to happen in America that occurred, often gloriously, in other times and other places. So they fail to find, because they fail to see, that which is occurring gloriously in America, which has never occurred anywhere else.

And what is it? If it can be briefly expressed or in any way summarized, it is this:

The step by step fulfillment of the democratic dream: an entire people freely enjoying an abundant life.

Other nations have been prosperous, some have been great, but never before have so many in all sectors of society shared so fully in the products of a prosperous civilization, or been invited to participate so widely in its greatness.

Yet there is more to the new abundant life than the visible increase in possessions, striking as that is.

Entering American life is a new and quite sudden mastery of possessions, of techniques for speed and comfort, of gadgets, if you prefer. Wisdom is beginning to appear in the way people use them to enhance life, in the individuality of their choice. There is a beauty in the objects themselves, in the integrity of their form and material to their purpose.

But it is a new beauty, a beauty new to the world, as new as the civilization it enriches. Its features are not Greek or Roman. Its proportions are not Classical. It may not even be "fine" art. In America the distinction between the fine arts and the useful arts is fast dissolving, as Emerson predicted it would. And as we turn the pages of this issue, we begin to understand why it should. Is the architecture of a fine house a fine or a use- (Continued overleaf)

. . . you enter and see more beauty.

A home for all

This home of two librarians, man and wife, symbolizes the new spirituality of contemporary American life. It is a house with a quiet splendor of its own, available to all in our classless society. Standing among the trees on its own private plot of ground, it is independent, individual and in harmony with man and nature.

"We have a new freedom from servants. Maids and mistresses are freed from each other to have a fuller life of their own."

ful art? As a useful art what is finer? As a fine art what is more useful?

Beauty has escaped the museum and entered the home. It has fled the frame of the easel painting and found life in the walls themselves. It is no longer limited to a long dimly-lit gallery or isolated in a dusty display case. It reveals itself in the curve of a chair, the line of a spoon, the pattern of a fabric or a garden trellis. It has become human and companionable.

Democracy has become a way of life made beautiful.

The economy of democracy has at last produced a democracy of culture, and the new world has a soul for its body.

These are proud words. How might we test them?

Perhaps nothing is more revealing about a society than the questions its members ask of it. Behind each question are assumptions about the past and hopes for the future, which tell us a great deal about the present.

What bothers us these days?

What do we say to each other? What do we complain about as we sit among friends? What are our discontents?

"Democracy means nothing," we tell each other, "if it says nothing about the quality of life for the 'common man'".

But now more and more of us are insisting, "Nor does it say much, if it speaks only of the 'common man'. For democracy to be democracy it must provide plenty of room for the uncommon man—the individual, creative, unorthodox man."

A good life for the "common man"? We now take this goal for granted. Possibilities for the uncommon man? That is the goal that is rising out of our complaints, for we now recognize that all men are individuals, unique and uncommon.

What else bothers us?

"What can we do with the new leisure that is ours?" we ask each other.

Behind this "problem" is the fact of leisure. Not too long ago the social problem was: How can we achieve leisure? It is a measure of our difference from other civilizations that the problem in America has risen to the higher level of asking what we can do with the leisure we now have. Life has gone from a brutish struggle for existence to a human search for significance.

Which leads to our next plaint:

"We are becoming too materialistic. Why don't we Americans realize that man does not live on bread alone?"

spiritual significance in their lives may be said to have found material abundance, although this is not always true—sometimes, as in areas of the Far East, the spiritual life may be sought as compensation for the lack of even subsistence living. In America it is sought as completion of a life already, for the most part, materially satisfied.

In this now common complaint lies our greatest hope and goal for the future.

The American search for the spiritual is even greater than the increasing numbers of people newly going to church and to synagogue indicate. As God's first temples were said to have been the trees, so today His first temples might be said to be man's home among the trees—on its own plot of land, independent, individual and in harmony with the restoring rhythms of nature.

That is the inner content of these houses. That is the meaning of this statistic:

Today 60 per cent of our families own their homes. (Please turn to page 272)

By LYMAN BRYSON

A cultural revolution is taking place in the minds and spiritual habits of the American people. But what happens in the inner life of millions of men and women is difficult to get at and those to whom it happens are scarcely aware of it. The changes are taken for granted. What can be seen, and even measured to a degree, are the overt actions that show what new satisfactions are being sought.

Take, for example, books. The cultural revolution in America shows itself in the hundreds of thousands of books that are now being bought and read. They may not all wear such sober and durable covers as the books of our grandmothers wore. Book covers, like dresses, are brighter and flimsier than they used to be. But what is published and sold now, much of it in paper backs, is a greater amount of substantial reading than was ever attempted by any previous generation.

The trend illustrates a principle, which is that most people will respond to better things than they are used to, if given a chance. Those who manufacture and sell the things that make our homes more beautiful and more comfortable have known that for a long time. And this exposure principle has always been a rule of action among educators. It has been much talked about recently among broadcasters. Now the book publishers are beginning to profit by it.

These publishers are the most conscientious, but not the most enterprising, of the dealers in the stuff of culture. Whether or not they now know that they are working by a new rule does not matter. What does matter is that readers are getting better chances to respond to better things. (Please turn to page 323)

We're constantly up-dating our old houses

By NANCY CRAIG

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILLIAM HOWLAND

This Connecticut farmhouse, built pre-1750, was remodeled in the American tradition to afford the best in modern living.

There is a compelling urge to change, improve and perfect our homes, which is inherent in our American character. It is due, in part, to the never-ending stream of new materials, labor-saving equipment and improved techniques in home-making which constantly suggest ways of doing things better. Once we see a new, improved way, we up and take it. We are never satisfied with the status quo.

One place we keep modernizing the most is the kitchen. Here, rapidly advancing technologies make us want to change. The building industry makes this possible by producing the varied parts and stock appliances which are so flexible that we can fit them together, in our own individual way, to meet our new, high standards for a pleasant and efficient kitchen.

Another contributing factor in the persistent up-dating of our old houses is this wood-frame construction, which has a much longer life than people abroad realize. More easily controlled than brick or masonry, wood lends itself to change and remodeling. It is easy to saw, to cut holes in it for windows. Partitions can be changed, rooms added with comparative ease. The early 18th-century Connecticut house shown on these pages is an excellent example of an old house which its owners have continued (Please turn to page 311)

Dining room was remodeled around original fireplace and old pine paneling. Wall covering is documentary print.

Simulated skylight of plastic panels now conceals fluorescent tubes that illuminate the cooking and clean-up centers (below).

Remodeled kitchen with glass doors and unframed window, which bring in outdoors, is a marvel of efficiency, belying age of house, yet in harmony with it. Note simple beauty of cabinet doors of natural plywood.

The spirit of the old house is carried into the spacious kitchen by virtue of the original hand-hewn oak post, uncovered when wall was demolished. Behind plywood doors in the background is large wall-storage unit.

AFTER

There are no rewards as satisfying as developing yourself to your fullest potential, of seeing your ideas come to triumphant fruition. This is the highest and purest meaning of success, in America.

The pictures on these and the next six pages give you a look at the home of John and Elinor McGuire who, in the space of only seven years, built a new and successful business from scratch. Their success is in no way unique. What they have done is completely in the American tradition of doing what you want to do to make a living.

The McGuires' reward is of two kinds: tangible, so they could financially afford this fine house; and intangible, involving satisfactions of the spirit, which cannot be shown in photographs, but are nevertheless very real. As John McGuire put it, "Our business has us by the nape of the neck, but we love it. It's so unlimited in every way. Success is always just somewhere else. But in the meantime we work like mad and enjoy the work."

The business the McGuires created is the manufacturing of rattan furniture for the decorator trade. There have previously been a number of companies making outdoorsy rattan furniture, but no company made it with enough quality and style to permit its being used in formal and elegant living rooms. Thus the McGuires created a new niche for themselves which had never existed before.

This is more interesting once (Please turn the page)

The house the McGuires remodeled is 40 years old. Its interior spaces were pleasantly proportioned, but the details and equipment were drab and obsolete by today's high standards. The freshening consisted of removing old moldings, simplifying fireplace mantels, replacing bulky radiators with baseboard heating, shifting door openings to better positions, covering old floors with finer surfacings (such as black leather diamonds in the master bedroom here). It is very American to update our old houses by remodeling. This one was gloomy and depressing. Now it is fresh, cheerful, modern and convenient.

The new baby's nursery is all white (she is a girl), but its fragile, perishable look is thoroughly dirtproof. Floor is vinyl tile and the white upholstery is "Naugahyde," a plastic but "breathing" fabric. Spool crib is an antique, which will be replaced with full-size bed later.

The bedroom for the six-year old son, Don McGuire, is likewise sturdy, though handsome. Floor is vinyl tile; curtains and walls are of mattress ticking. All counter tops are laminated plastic, so impervious to most boyish accidents.

you realize that, when they started, they were both under thirty years of age, fresh out of the Navy (he was a naval pilot, she a WAVE lieutenant) with only $3,000 savings between them and almost no commercial experience.

To do what they've done means they had to learn how to manufacture with both wood and rattan, how to finish, how to upholster, how to import raw materials from the Orient, how to design for the decorating trade, how to sell, how to run a wholesale showroom, how to finance and do accounting. Above all, they had to educate their tastes in design matters, so they could fill a need not being filled by companies already manufacturing furniture.

They did all these widely differing things so well that their volume has increased twenty times in seven years. They finally felt secure enough financially to buy an old house in the better residential part of San Francisco, remodel it and furnish it with their own furniture and the treasures they had collected in their travels all over the world.

The details of how they got started and how their business grew is the story of (Please turn the page)

A new deck was built outside kitchen, which is one story above the ground, so that meals could be served outdoors without running up and down. Old kitchen was cut up into pantries, back porches, and was woefully inefficient.

The McGuires used stock kitchen cabinets, but resurfaced them with teak, which they import for their furniture factory. Double row of stainless steel strips are door pulls. All metal in room (counters, sinks, appliance fronts) is stainless.

As is usual, most of remodeling occurred in kitchen. All major appliances were built in—even freezer and refrigerator above. Exhaust fan is over cooking area.

Mr. & Mrs. Everybody of the U.S.A. . . . the story of Opportunity Unlimited, the story of deciding how and where you want to live and work and then proceeding to do so.

The story goes like this: After the war, while John was still trying to sell Elinor on the idea of marrying him, he was working for an oil company in the Philippines, looking for sites for gas stations. He saw the rattan furniture that was being made there and became interested in the workable properties of rattan: that it was nearly impervious to hard use, with great tensile strength, easily bent when steamed, would retain a shape when molded, was light in weight.

Convenient proximity of the deck to both the kitchen and the breakfast room make it pleasant to dine here. Here a rolling table is laid with a handsome plastic tablecloth by Dru Dunn. Table and chairs are of the McGuires' own manufacture. Needless to say, they used their own things wherever feasible, but did not let it become monotonous.

Intensive use of partitions for storage and utility purposes is becoming more and more a common practice. The prevalent American wood frame construction facilitates this.

Shallow drawers for table linen are built in under the counter, and are double acting from both kitchen and breakfast room. Two walls of this room are hung with Japanese shoji.

Like so many Americans, he had always been interested in hand crafts and all kinds of manufacturing processes. Like so many Americans too, he could look at a material and intuitively know what its potentials of workability probably were. He didn't like the heavy swirls and pretentious ornateness that were the prevalent idiom for rattan in the Philippines. He decided, "Here's a field in which somebody with a fresh eye could build a nice business!"

He came back to the States to learn about rattan in America. To do so, he got a job selling imported rattan furniture in San Francisco. (He and Elinor chose this West Coast city, because they had decided it was where they wanted to live; and they could start a new business anywhere.) Before long they were importing for themselves and had a wholesale showroom to display their wares.

But to the McGuires, this was just a toehold. They didn't like the designs they were importing, so they decided to get a designer (Please turn to page 302)

Breakfast room was also opened up at the rear to the deck. A pair of sliding doors replaced old short windows, which may be seen in photo above. Even remaining window was modernized with new narrowed sash.

How our cars have changed our gardens

Changes in our way of life, like changes in our personal health, come so slowly that we are hardly aware of them. Yet look at this parade of lovely gardens that show the new ways in which we handle the land our houses sit on—ways never dreamed of sixty years ago

YESTERDAY

We went all over town to find our pleasures, using horse-drawn carriages or walking through quiet streets. Watching those who passed in the street was considered a pleasure, but is not so considered today.

TODAY

All the facilities that used to be scattered around the community we now want to exist on our own little piece of land. So the landscape problem is more complex, but more interesting.

When finally history sorts out the esthetic contributions of America to the 20th Century, it will probably say that one of the most notable was our landscape architecture. For we have done that typically American thing of coping with problems and turning the problems into assets by solving them.

Sixty years ago, before the automobile age, our gardens were primarily botanical exhibits. Our front lawns really belonged to the neighborhood street, and all the lawns were composed together to make a green parkway. Very little traffic passed by on these streets and what little there was we liked to look at from a front porch. It was an event to see who drove by.

It was also customary to find one's pleasures and relaxations by going away from home to the school, the park, the church, (Please turn the page)

Designing for low maintenance can be visually pleasing. A curved line and three steps fading into a wall are more exciting than if this had been merely a rolling lawn. Only mowing is necessary here. No hand trimming is required.

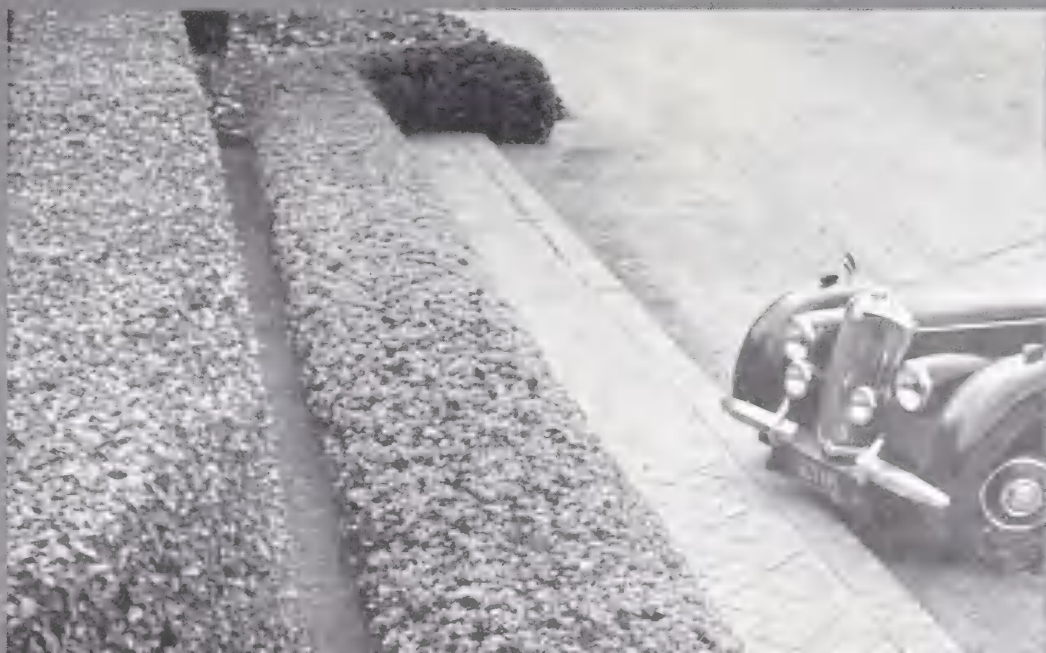

Low-maintenance front entrance. Ground covers of ivy and juniper, together with evergreen shrubs, create a pleasant atmosphere for all corners, while at same time they produce an effect of dignity and calmness, which looks equally well summer and winter.

We are learning how to prune so trunk patterns of trees count for much in esthetic whole. Everything in this lush scene is maintenance-free, except few pots of begonias on the wall.

Creating privacy was the goal in building these fences and lanais. Service yard of a close neighbor was screened and tree trunks dramatized.

Arriving by car, as we invariably do, caused us to create motor courts so guests can park off the street, leaving streets wholly free for traffic. Hedges are clipped with electric trimmers.

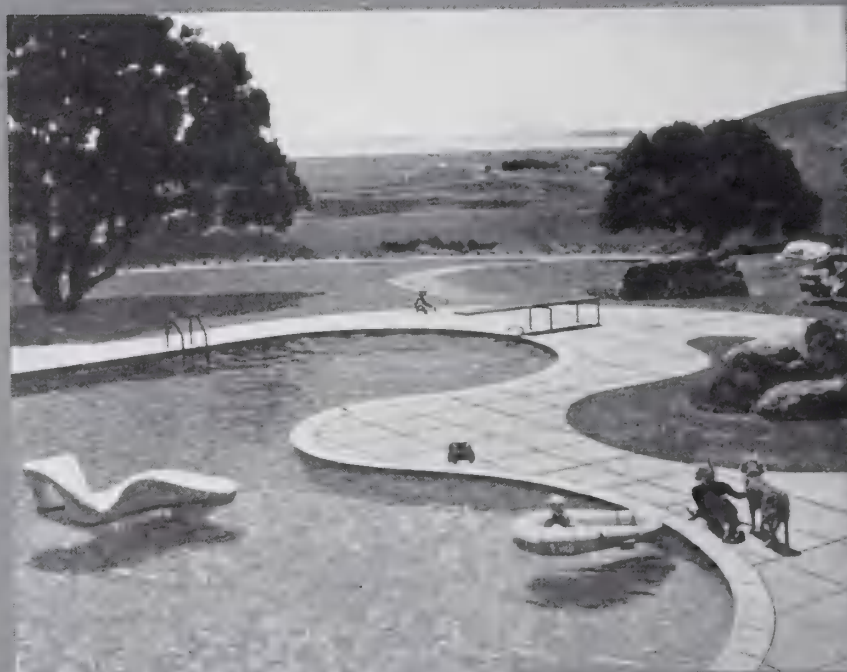

This deck lets you be out with nature, but with no other maintenance problem than to sweep deck. Ground cover is ivy.

Natural landscape takes kindly to curves, though man sometimes forgets it. Above, 17th-century French version of "English park." Again we are using curves, but with purpose, as in swimming pool of right.

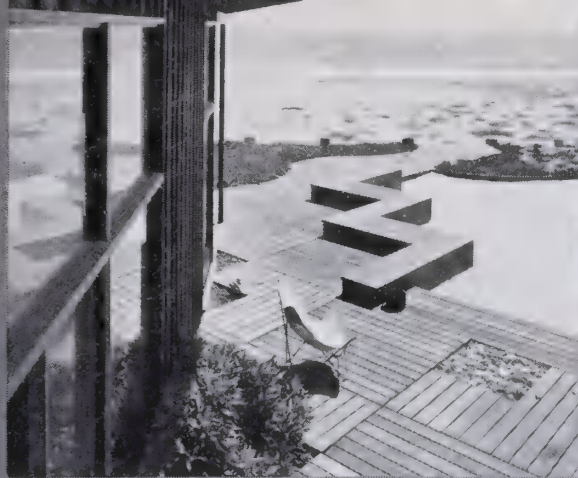

Serenity is keynote of this garden. Man has left his mark here, so feels more part of garden than if it were wild. Sun and shade determined paving.

People are integrating garden with interior views. Paving is like an extension of an interior rug and is lived on in the same manner. Side-line fence creates privacy.

Wood deck laid over sand. Lets beach house extend its living right out to beach—typical of trend to interpenetration of spaces in every way.

Triumph deck was put where best view could be had. Side of house behind common deck sets out open room to house by a path. An example of private viewing in open design relation.

the auditorium or the river for boating and swimming. But the motor age and the growth of our towns into cities changed the desirability of all this.

Today's crowded streets and fast-moving traffic make it less desirable to leave home, unless business requires it, or some long vacation trip lures us. For evening or week-end recreation we are happy to stay put. So we have provided ourselves at home with many of the pleasures formerly provided by the community.

The design of our gardens reflects this shift in values. Now plants have to be an adjunct and a frame, a background for a much larger, more complex composition than they were before. Our best gardens have integrated an intricate set of requirements into a calm, satisfying whole, while still having the result look like a garden and be a garden. Above all, we have sought a result which would have an air of serenity and produce a sense of peace and ease. For now more than ever we want the calming effect that the presence of nature has always had for mankind.

Thus the trend of the last fifteen or twenty years has been away from the "picture garden" to a new kind of residential landscape geared first of all to family requirements. We are abandoning the old unwritten laws about open front lawns, and no visual barriers between houses. Some parts of the country are slower in making this shift than others. But the speed-up in our changing attitude on this point since the end of World War II is very apparent to observers who watch this sort of social change. Privacy for the garden is rapidly becoming a must.

The most noticeable factor in our 20th-century home-site usage is the effect of the automobile, since nearly every family has one or more. The motor court, the off-street parking space for guest cars, ease for the owners to get from their own cars into their house—all these must be solved first, before any other landscape considerations can be taken up. The presence of whizzing cars on the streets also distracts from the peace and serenity that is wanted in the garden, so more and more we are erecting fences, shrub hedges, masonry walls, earth mounds and other such visual barriers between our yards and the street.

Another big factor that has changed our gardens is the lack of help. (Please turn to page 344)

A new elegance comes to the desert with this Arizona house, planned around an open portico. Its tranquil beauty results partly from modern materials, such as concrete blocks and steel framing, coming into their effective own.

The Look of American Life at the Top Level

Two new houses by Frank Lloyd Wright

show the quality of life that is the American ideal

By JOHN DE KOVEN HILL

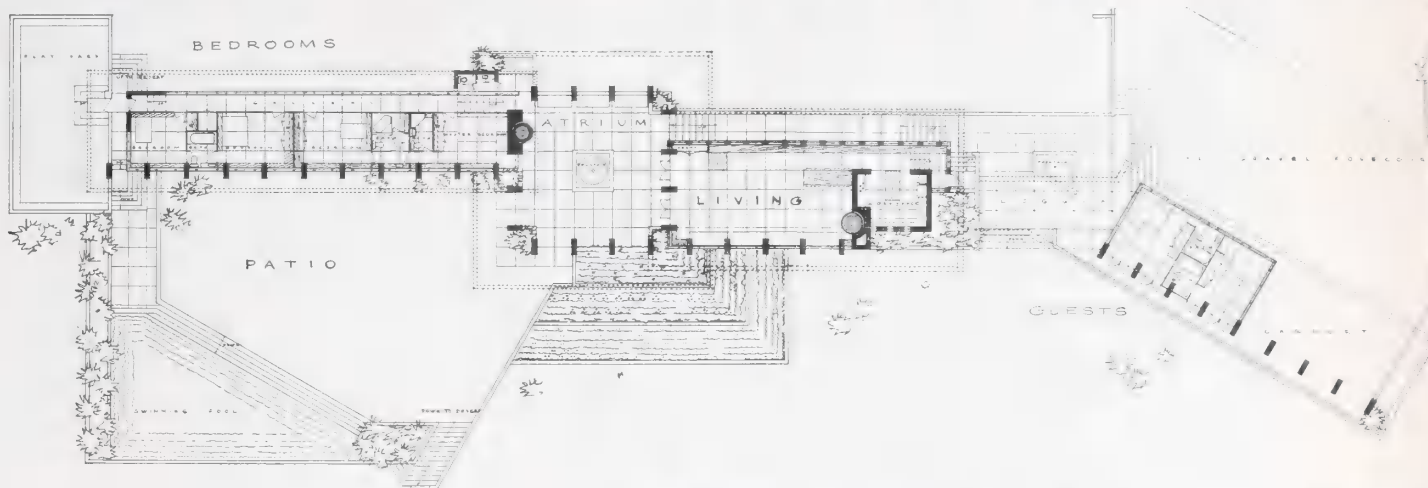

Patterns and textures of structural materials are augmented by refined details like colorful grillwork, embossed copper roof edge.

The two great houses shown on these eight pages are rich with the beauty that can be had in living at its best in America today. These houses are doubly significant, because they are the work of our greatest architect for the families of two leaders in industry. As family homes they express the taste and values of many of those who rise to industrial prominence in our society.

All across the country our living standard is high and rising higher. And the contribution a sympathetic dwelling can make to family life is increasingly appreciated on all levels.

In his buildings Frank Lloyd Wright continues to lead the way in showing us the beauty that can be ours, a beauty of our time and place. The house on this page and the next is truly a family gathering place, where children and grandchildren can come from different parts of the country to be together and to enjoy the Arizona desert. In this wild countryside, with its extreme moods of violent storms and sweet clarity, this house takes its place as naturally as the cactus that grows against its walls or the ocotillo that silhouettes its angular branches against the sky.

Another building might make it possible for humans to live, as observers, in the desert. But this one makes it desirable to be there. It is a protecting shell that permits its human occupants to delight in the desert and savor its moods.

The enclosed rooms provide mechanical air-conditioned shelter from extreme heat and cool winter nights. But the main feature of the house is an open portico in the center—the atrium. By its very design, this room sets up its own breezes and creates its own climate, so the desert air and view can be enjoyed (Please turn the page) more hours a day and many more days a year.

This natural air conditioning is brought about in several ways. Since the site is part way up the mountain slope, the room was made open on opposite sides to capitalize on the natural updrafts and downdrafts peculiar to mountains. These drafts, almost imperceptible out in the open, are drawn through the semi-confined space and speeded up into a real breeze, thanks to the suction created by the hole in the roof and the funnel action of the entire opening in the atrium.

The deep shade of the broad roof and evaporating moisture from the splashing fountain not only cool the air, but, in doing so, set up another inducement to air movement, due to temperature differential. The roof itself, supported on slender steel columns, floats above the masonry piers and adjoining roofs to permit a cooling wash of air under the ceiling.

Landscaping is a part of the concept, too. A band of green planting puts cool moisture into the dry desert air and replaces heat that desert rocks would otherwise reflect. (Please turn the page)

Atrium, under high roof in center, is feature of house. Adjoining walled garden and swimming pool provide oasis above the desert.

From within atrium, tapered columns and richly embossed copper on roof edges create bold patterns against the clear blue Arizona sky.

Living room is retreat for winter nights or summer days; profile of mountains is always visible through continuous glass above windows.

The atrium, a great open living room in center of house, overlooks desert valley, has natural air conditioning even on windless hot days, thanks to triple action of three design elements: breezeway; opening in roof, which creates suction; and evaporative cooling effect of column of water in the fountain.

Living room has quiet gray and blue color scheme deriving from the natural colors of concrete blocks and the precast roof slabs of wood fibers bound with cement. Light steel-framed roof seems to float, delicately supported on little metal posts above piers.

Another Wright house for an Oklahoma family

In contrast to the brilliant dryness and jagged profiles of the desert, life in the gentle hills of Oklahoma has a different quality. Here is another Wright house, for another family, that takes shape from a different set of problems. These spreading roofs and tawny walls are deeply colored like the red soil and blue sky of Oklahoma.

In winter this building is a warm retreat under a white covering of snow; in the rainy season, a glistening copper and ceramic shell. It acts in all ways as streamlined armour against the winds from the western plains. Yet, when Oklahoma is on its best behavior, this house can be opened wide to take in the great blue sky and the quiet slopes of the grassy hills. In other words, it affords all the necessary protection against a severe climate, winter and summer, and in addition it was designed to respond with equal positiveness to ideal days.

The look of repose in this building is not the result of arbitrary esthetic decision. It is the natural result of the architect's understanding of the local climate—how it could best be made delightful as a setting for the life of a young family. The actual look of the house derives directly from the kind of shelter it affords. The spreading roofs, necessary for protection from storms, are also needed as a defense against sky glare and are skillfully designed to give complete shade to all the glass areas during the hot summer months without cutting out the (Please turn the page)

Against the vast Oklahoma sky, warm coloring and quiet lines are appropriate to the low hills and level horizon. Modern plastics, glass and steel take a natural place with ancient materials, such as brick and copper.

This living room takes in a great sweeping view, yet maintains a serene air of protective shelter. It affords repose and security without confinement, its spaciousness amplified by long vistas through many areas of the house as well as outward through the high glass doors. Storage cabinets for the family collection of fine paintings and prints have doors sloped to form an easel for changing displays. Cabinets also house "hi-fi" equipment. Balcony above fireplace is off master bedroom.

Furnishings, as works of art, are becoming more prevalent than ever in America's fine houses. Owners are commissioning artists to create highlights for the over-all scheme, like this entrance-hall rug designed by Mr. Wright and executed by Edward Fields, Inc.

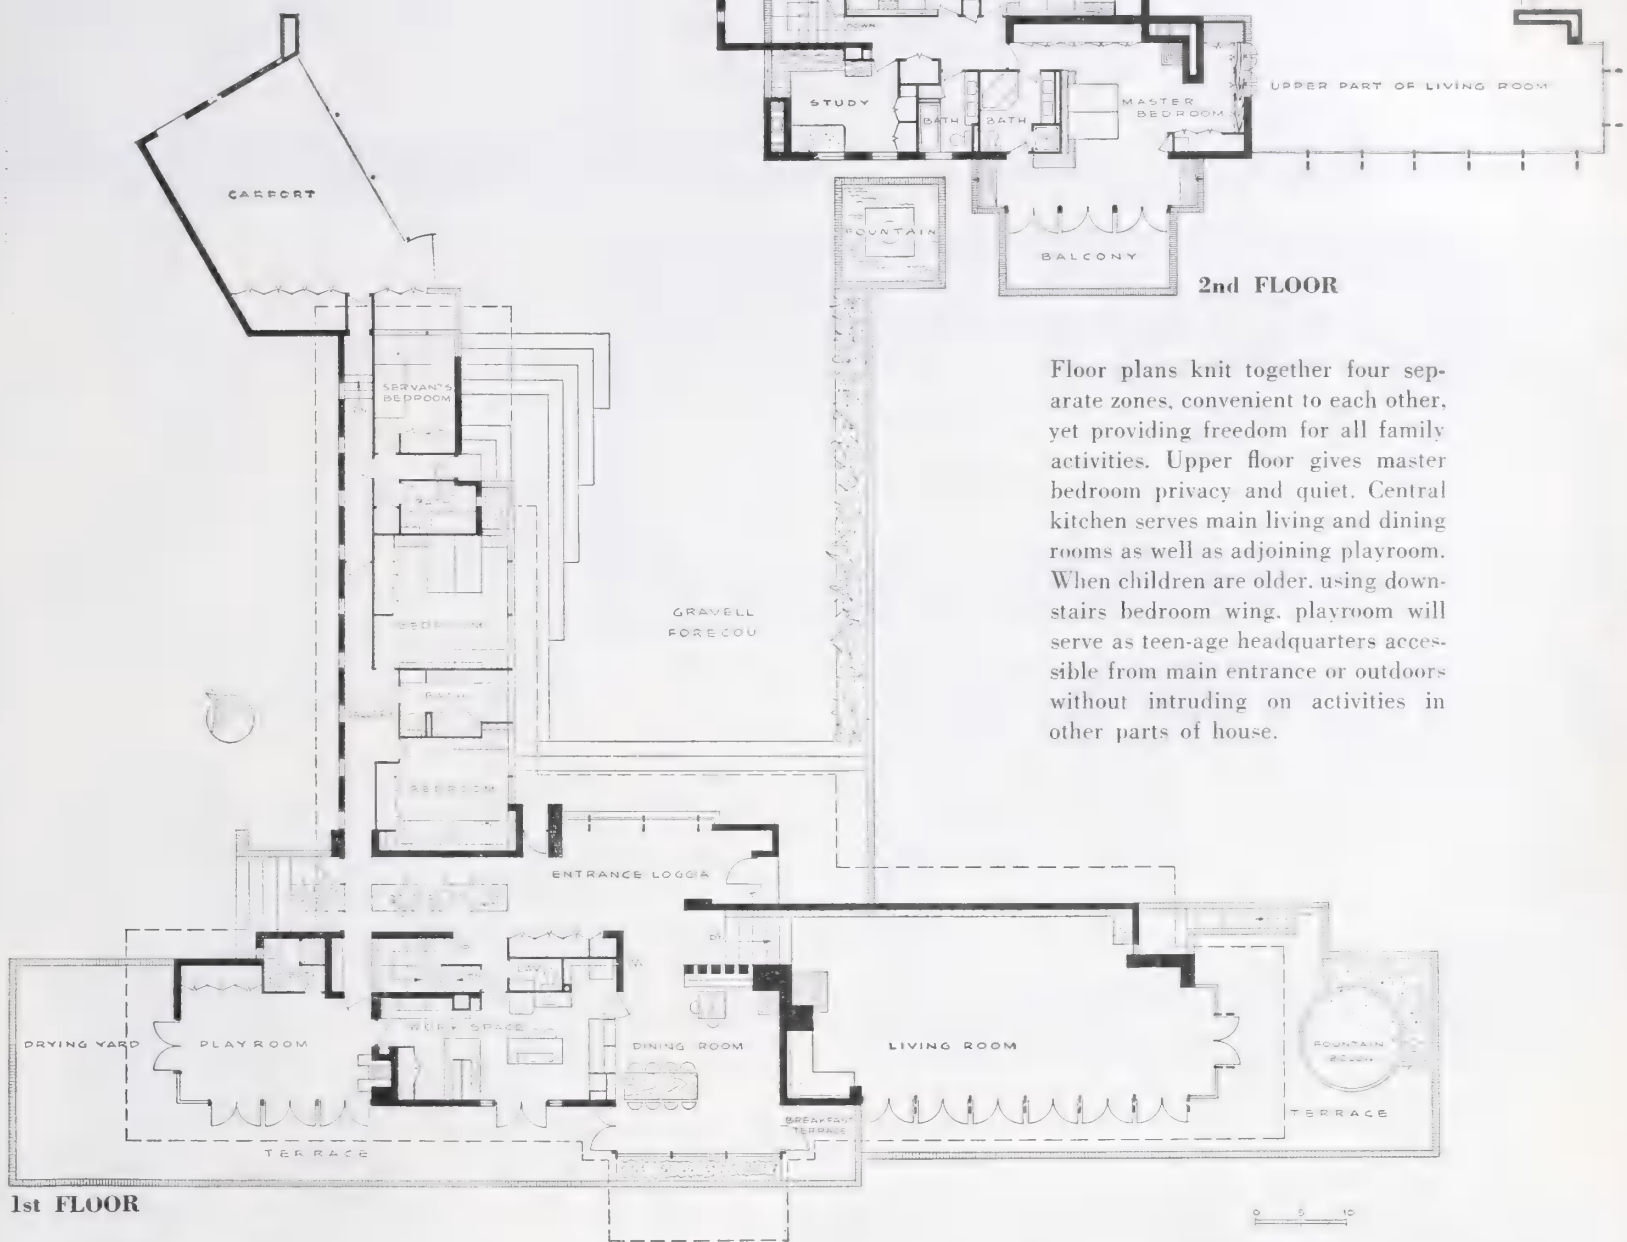

The entrance court fountain, a gracious greeting, glows at night with light inside the specially cast plastic hemispheres. Features such as this, designed as part of the architecture and landscaping, make their positive contribution to the pleasure of daily living.

Glass mosaic coffee table by Bruce Brooks Pfeiffer is another example of art work specially commissioned to bring an added refinement which contributes harmoniously to the total effect. Shimmering tesserae form rich feature in color scheme of room.

Floor plans knit together four separate zones, convenient to each other, yet providing freedom for all family activities. Upper floor gives master bedroom privacy and quiet. Central kitchen serves main living and dining rooms as well as adjoining playroom. When children are older, using downstairs bedroom wing, playroom will serve as teen-age headquarters accessible from main entrance or outdoors without intruding on activities in other parts of house.

lower sun, so welcome in winter. Further sun protection occurs in the deep fin-like mullions, which shield the elegantly high windows from the horizontal rays of the sun as it settles in the west.

Supplementing this shelter from above are solid brick walls at the base, lasting barriers against dusty, ground-hugging winds. Wherever full-length openings occur, they open onto defending terraces or balconies with solid parapets that deflect the wind upward or let it pass through beneath.

The floor plan is as thoughtfully arranged to make the necessities of living delightful. As you can see from the plans above, although this is a large house, the basic organization of the various rooms would be excellent in any scale.

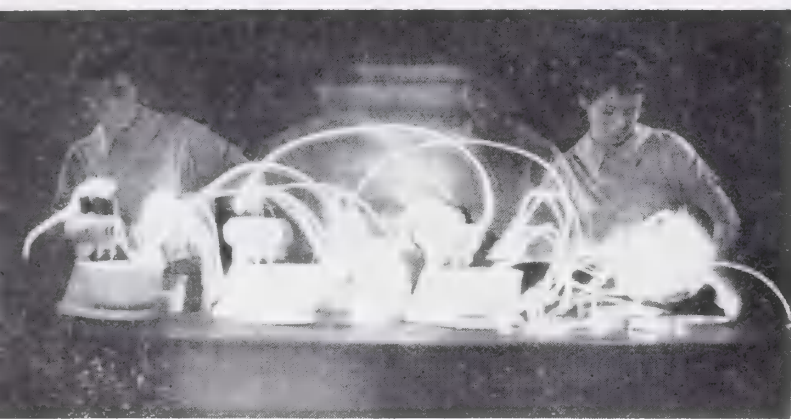

The plan consists of four separate elements clustered about the entrance loggia:

First, the main living and dining rooms for family life and entertaining; second, the children's playroom and yard, adjoining the kitchen, but also directly accessible from the center of the house and from outdoors; third, the main floor bedroom wing with a semi-detached servants' room at the end and bedrooms that now serve as guest rooms until the children are grown up (Please turn to page 320)

Appearance of house takes form from the kind of protection it affords—deep shade from sun and sky glare, solid outlying walls and parapets as defense against dusty ground winds. House looks intimate, inviting, even though extensive.

How progress is unending in cake baking

How cake baking has changed in 20 years! These pictures were made by attaching small flashlight bulbs to a model's hands and then photographing her as she made three cakes, three different ways. The top picture records the steps she went through to bake a cake the old-fashioned way. In the middle picture she is baking a cake from Pillsbury's present formula; and in the bottom picture she is making a cake from a new Pillsbury one-step formula, which will be available this fall. Note the steady reduction in work.

Anyone can make delicious corn bread

Our favorite hot corn bread is easier to make than ever before with the new mix packaged by Quaker Oats, which comes with its own mixing bowl and baking pan. Merely add one egg and a half cup of milk to contents of pliofilm bag, mix by working the bag with your fingers, empty into foil pan, bake and enjoy fine corn bread.

One motor for several appliances

Taking the place of many individually powered appliances are units such as Nutone's built-in Food Center shown here. One motor operates blender, mixer, knife sharpener and juicer, with more attachments to follow. It's also available as free-standing unit. Another example is Oster's combination of chopper-slicer-juicer-blender.

about American cooking?

So much, so good— with so little time and work!

By POPPY CANNON

House Beautiful's Food Editor

They say that people can never see the most notable things about their own age or their own nationality: that it must be left to the generations that follow to sort out what are the finest flowerings of one's own period.

This may well be so. But we strongly suspect that when Time sorts out the truth about 20th-century America, it will be clear that the unprecedented contribution of the American way may be that so many people ate so well, with such enjoyment and with so little effort expended in doing so.

The variety offered is so vast that even grocers and food editors can hardly keep up with what's available. We have obliterated the seasons, thanks to fast rail and air transportation and to the fantastic ability of the freezer to halt time altogether. We have inherited the earth, for we import the foodstuffs of the whole world. We have removed most of the drudgery from food preparation, thanks to the high percentage of work done by industry before it ever reaches our kitchens and to the battery of specialized kitchen equipment that is so widely owned.

In the food field, we have brought mass production, mass distribution and mass consumption to the highest level in the history of man. And it has produced a miracle! For what is most dazzling is the way in which mass has taken on class. We are rapidly becoming a nation of food connoisseurs, for as more people try more things they are developing discrimination, perception. Since more and more of the mindless work of cooking is done industrially, leaving the interesting and creative part for the cook in the home, it is developing a new kind of cook—the talented amateur. This new talented amateur has the time, the energy and the facilities to be concerned with the same gastronomic niceties as have motivated and occupied the great chefs and gourmets throughout the ages.

Describing American cooking cannot be done in terms of recipes. Naturally we have our regional ways and our national foods, like hamburger and apple pie à la mode. But to look at these too closely, interesting as they are, would be not seeing the forest for the trees.

The American's supply of commercial foods is so diverse, and is broadening with such rapidity, that one could not eat one's way through all the possibilities in several years. If there is monotony in anyone's diet, it is one's own fault. For even people living in remote, out-of-the-way places may order enormous variety by mail and get it delivered by the postman. (A full report on this will appear in the December 1956 issue of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL.)

The effect of all this variety on our eating habits can hardly yet be estimated—probably not for another ten years. But it is the heart of the matter. Supermarkets dot the countryside everywhere, each ringed with parking space for from 100 to 5,000 cars. Visitors from abroad, who have shopped in our supermarkets for the first time, are amazed at the fantastic variety, the moderate prices, the ease and time-saving of being able to buy meats, vegetables, fruits, poultry, fish and even cleaning and drug supplies under one roof, instead of having to go to half a dozen stores.

Even in the smallest towns you find country stores which have taken on supermarket practices and carry thousands of items, ranging from a dozen fruit juice concentrates through to 20 kinds of breads and rolls.

Because so much variety is offered to everyone, it is creating the atmosphere and conditions for a phenomenal increase in the number of gourmets.

The Gourmet and the Supermarket

The supermarket has become more interested in serving and catering to the gourmet. Special sections are devoted to epicurean and novelty foods. Through all stores, there is evidence of the growing tendency to include the best of brands—luxury selections, foreign (Please turn the page)

What's American about American cooking?

imports, and exotic foods—all formerly quite hard to find.

In one small supermarket recently, we found products from a dozen countries, ranging from English crackers and marmalade to Holland hams, Spanish olives, Belgian biscuits, French mustard, Norwegian flatbrød, Italian tomato paste, Israeli cookies, East Indian chutney, West Indian pepper sauce, South African lobster tails, sardines from Portugal, herring from Sweden, frozen rainbow trout from Iceland and coconut chips from Hawaii. Not to mention coffees, teas and spices from South America, Asia and Africa. As a result, people not now gourmets are exposed to new items, are tempted to try, and soon become broader, more knowledgeable and more worldly in their eating habits.

The most stirring accomplishment, perhaps the most exciting development in the whole history of gastronomy, is taking place right here and now in the field of frozen prepared specialties. This was the dream: that some day the great prepared dishes of the whole world would be made available in all their finest perfection through canning and freezing. Now it is actually beginning to happen.

"If packages could talk," someone remarked recently, "the freezer cabinet in any shop would sound like the Biblical Tower of Babel"—Italian ravioli, lasagna, manicotti, eggplant Parmigiano, Polish pierogi, Hungarian stuffed cabbage, Chinese egg rolls and chow mein, kosher blintzes and potage St. Germain. In the beginning many of such items were intended for the foreign groups in our midst, but they are entering the broader main stream of American eating. We are turning from provincials into cosmopolitans.

This did not come about easily. Despite amazing advances in canning techniques, there remained a great deal to be desired in the freezing of pre-cooked foods. Historically, the first commercially-frozen cooked foods were disappointing. In many cases the quality was poor, the packaging inept, the prices out of line. Industry became discouraged.

Then the woman in the home showed the way. Quietly, spontaneously, there began, in widely separated homes, a practice which HOUSE BEAUTIFUL reported on four years ago and named "Chain Cooking". This is a modus operandi by which women linked their stoves and ovens to their freezers, and stocked their zero-degree larders with their own best cooking—soups, roasts, casseroles and cakes.

Over a period of years, quite independently on their own, these women discovered what would freeze and what would not, how to wrap it, how long to keep it, how to thaw it and how most conveniently and easily to get it on their tables.

The lady led; industry followed. Then famous restaurants like Chambord, Howard Johnson and Stouffer began to freeze their specialties too. Chambord specialties (le coq au vin, etc.) are in the best French tradition. Since Stouffer has always been noted for a cozy domestic quality, their lists of frozen foods include lobster newburg, Welsh rarebit, macaroni and cheese, scalloped chicken with noodles, salmon loaf, potatoes hashed in cream and potatoes au gratin. Desserts are staunchly American: apple and cherry cobbler, and that typically midwestern invention—an upside-down pineapple skillet cake.

Contrary to what you would expect, all these ready-to-eat and semi-prepared foods have led to:

An American Renaissance in Cooking

With so much of the back-breaking mindless drudgery removed from food preparation, we have been freed to take a new interest in food and cooking. In the last decade food and cooking have become as much a part of American conversation as they were in the gourmet heydays of France. A publisher noted rather wistfully, "There is a new cookbook printed every day, but," he brightened, "there's still plenty of people to buy and read them."

Practically every church group, town, county, state and region has its local collection of "receipts" for which attics have been ransacked, old journals perused and faded handwriting carefully copied. Not hundreds but thousands of people are cookbook collectors with libraries ranging from a dozen or fifty to a thousand volumes. Acres of paper are devoted to receipts, not only in books and in magazines, but in leaflets, folders, labels on packages.

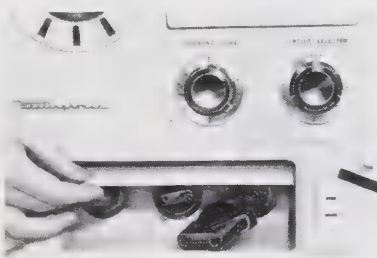

If all the recipes printed in America were strung together, they would circle the globe many times—literally. One large company has had its representatives in France, Italy and Scandinavia for several years to collect recipes which have been adapted and translated into American terms to be distributed by the millions in booklets and also in bags of flour.

Many reasons could be given for this growth of cosmopolitanism—the sojourns of American troops in far-off lands, the great increase in travel abroad, vicarious travel through books, magazines, movies, the theater, radio and television. All these undoubtedly have played a part. Probably just as important are factors which have operated at home, conditions which might seem at first to delay the growth of an epicurean attitude. What has not been realized, because it has come about so (Please turn to page 329)

New thermostatic appliances advance our skills

With more than five million of the new thermostatically controlled frypans in current use, and production at an all time high, American cooking reaches a new state of perfection. The Sunbeam automatic frypan, pictured here, one of many on the market, demonstrates why an amateur can now cook like a professional. In clear view on the handle is the temperature guide. Set the control to the suggested correct heat on the calibrated dial and you are assured of perfect results, achieved automatically.

Cooking center for specialized electrical appliances

Fast-growing use of specialized electric equipment calls for more house-power and outlets than most kitchens now provide. "Appliance Centers" by Westinghouse and Globe American supply additional outlets for same or extra current. Westinghouse Center shown has total capacity of 7400 watts, with controls for automatic start-and-stop cooking and timing. Each 115-volt outlet has its own circuit breaker. Picture above shows three cords retractable on reels.

So good —for so many!

Any study of American culture must include the objects in daily use: telephones, table service, chairs, sofas, and all the rest. Not only do they constitute the bulk of what we see around us; they also disprove a wide-spread error about mass production.

That error goes like this: mass production is necessarily based on mass appeal; anything with mass appeal must have a low level of taste; therefore, mass production, like mass culture, is deliberately designed for low-level or debased taste.

This is a theory that's been bandied about since democracy first became a real possibility in human affairs. It can finally be tested by the facts of American experience. Throughout this issue evidence is offered to the contrary in architecture, cooking, literature and music. Democracy is high-brow: exposed to the best, eventually people want it and buy it. Now study the photo below: furniture, fabrics and flooring are mass-produced. Their design is good. Sales of the sofa alone were $500,000 in the past three months. (Please turn to page 299)

So much—for so little!

Here is a sampling of inexpensively priced objects for everyday living—the kind of household necessities one sees, touches, uses day in and day out. By any standard, they are bargains, representing such technological research, such design study, such exploration and experiment in chemistry and physics that no one could afford to buy a single one of them, if it had to be made to his specific order. But by the economic phenomenon of mass production, quantities of these things are in American stores from coast to coast, marked with a price that millions can afford to pay and the most design-conscious can salute.

They are, moreover, the kind of bargain Americans take for granted—a synthesis of good design, durability and easy maintenance. Note especially that they are unquestionably beautiful in design—an immediate refutation of the critics who claim that mass production lowers the taste. (Please turn to page 295)

AMERICA—BODY AND SOUL

In 1940, it was 43.6 per cent. In 1950, 55 per cent.

To own one's home! Has this not been part of the democratic dream? Not only for the landlord, the seigneur, the shop owner, but for the clerk, the factory worker, the carpenter. To have a good life while knowing the same good life is being enjoyed by most of the people around you. Here is a moral basis for civilization that has never before existed on so grand a scale.

Here is where we begin to understand that we are exploring a civilization new to the world, an industrial civilization whose machines are making possible a new harmony between man and nature, between man and fellow man. Here is a spirituality of a new sort—nobility for all men.

AMERICA does not know the immoral, deadening effect of one small class having leisure and plenty at the expense of a far larger class fixed in servitude, forever condemned to subsistence living and earning. The moral equivocation of such a situation would dampen our whole spirit and make us cynical of the notion of democracy, instead of loudly, boisterously, even obnoxiously proud of it and its accomplishments for us. We are just plain exhilarated with the sensation of seeing a whole population rise together toward new heights in living.

But there are complaints about all this, too!

"You can't find a servant any more," one woman tells another, and sighs for the good old days when she could.

However, most people don't regret the passing of servants—least of all former servants and the vast majority who never had them to begin with.

Where once Socrates and Cicero depended on slaves to have the freedom and leisure to reflect on a philosophy of freedom, we do not. We have a machine-based, gadget-based freedom, surely providing a far more humane and far more wholesome setting for reflections on freedom.

If anything, we have a new freedom from servants; both maids and mistresses are at last freed from each other, free to make certain elementary discoveries of human values considered lost in a machine civilization.

Those many women who used to be servants are now cooking for their own families on their own electric ranges, instead of running other women's coal stoves.

And those fewer who once had servants are learning anew the real values, the true pleasures of life, once assigned by them to their servants. In caring for their children, they are having them for the first time. In running their homes, in cooking with dispatch and discretion, they are fulfilling themselves with a womanly art.

And their husbands, too, are arriving at the basic human pleasures described by Cervantes, as planting a tree, building a house, having a child.

Together, men and women are finding that the sought-for freedom from child-care, gardening, cooking, was to plunge into a lifeless vacuum of monotony, boredom and trivia. So they are returning to them with new understanding.

Never has there been so much labor-saving equipment for the home and never has there been so much pleasure in working around the home. Those of us who would know America must be ever prepared for these paradoxes.

A gadget does not eliminate work: it makes work more pleasurable. In the home, as in the new factories, whatever is dull, exhausting, repetitive and mindless, whatever, in other words, can best be done by a machine, is being done by a machine, leaving human beings for human uses. The most important product to come out of our factories is our worker; the most important thing in our homes is the family.

ONE FURTHER thought: The new gadgets—the blender, the freezer, the electric fryer—are not simply new ways of doing old things; they are new instruments for new ideals. They are making wholly new things newly possible.

As we look at the well-equipped, well-planned kitchens of the houses here, all our reflections about servants and servitude, about new ideals for old, help us to understand what we are seeing.

What else bothers us?

"We are living in an Age of Anxiety."

These are the words of an English poet now living in America, W. H. Auden. So we are, replies American anthropologist Margaret Mead. We have gone from an Age of Fear, of Poverty, to an Age of Anxiety. No longer is it physical fear of an enemy, a master, a bandit; no longer is it dread of starvation, of endless unemployment, that haunts us.

Ours is now an age of human problems on the level of Hamlet. There is anxiety about the meaning of life, the use of leisure, so that each might reach the fullest growth he was created capable of. Ours is the anxiety that produces a civilization and a culture worth being anxious about. It is the kind of anxiety that rendered Beethoven dissatisfied not only with his First Symphony, but with his Ninth too.

Ours is an open, restless society. It is full of social movement, of people advancing from one group to another, and on to another. Being restless, it is not very restful, and this has made the security and stability of home life all the more desirable. It has given the American family a new importance and vitality, more than equal to meeting the challenge of industrialism.

This, too, is part of the pictures of the homes on these pages, part of the picture of the new world.

What are some of the other elements that persuade us that it is indeed a new world, and not primarily a further development of an old one, that we are looking at?

Our statistics are full of them, once we recognize what they represent in human experiences, as in the case of home ownership by 60 per cent of all American families.

Over a million of these homes are being built every year. In almost every home there is at least one room for each member of the family. There is not quite a television set in each home, but we are rapidly getting there with our current 37 million sets, in addition to 125 million radios and 50 million telephones, that, together, are obliterating space and time and the distinction between farmer and metropolitan sophisticate.

SPEAKING of space and time, seven out of ten families own one or more pleasure cars. The very expression is significant: pleasure cars!

The next twelve months each car will have traveled almost 10,000 miles in pursuit of pleasure at an average speed of roughly 50 miles an hour. And there will have been enough room left over in the back seats to take every man, woman and child of Great Britain, France and Italy along, together with the entire American population in the front seats.

The automobile alone might be taken as the symbol of the newness of the new world we live in.

Pause a moment to think about the design of the new American home and how much of it involves the automobile: the driveway and off-the-street parking space, direct delivery from grocer's truck to kitchen, garage and storage for quantity buying, the assumption that the front door is where you arrive and park your car.

We in America take all this for granted. But the non-American is ever astounded by it, and sometimes repelled. It has given our homes a new kind of form, unfamiliar and so unacceptable, although if it were but understood, it would be found reminiscent of the great houses of England and France, with their carriage courts.

Here is where our gadgets combine to give us a new way of life: We pick up the phone (73 out of 100 homes have them) and order food for a week or longer from the grocer, who delivers them by car. This means hours saved from daily shopping, the possibility of living beyond the confines of a tight community, where house elbows house.

THE AUTOMOBILE has changed American life as much as anything has. It has done for the average citizen what domesticating the horse did for ancient man. It has destroyed cities with more efficiency than gunpowder, which un-walled medieval towns; than the long bow, which unhorsed knights. It has, indeed, knighted man himself and made him a lord of life.

The automobile as it is used in America, is no more a horseless carriage than we Americans are merely mechanized Europeans.

It is something qualitatively different, on the evolutionary order of man developing the dexterous use of thumb and forefinger, of rising erect from all fours. It has changed our attitude toward the possibilities and varieties of life—where we work and where we live, how we live and how we play.

Once workers were restricted to living within walking distance of where they worked. In many parts of the world they still live within the range of a subway or a bicycle, or are tied to the schedule of a company bus and so limited to living collectively. The automobile is upsetting all this in America. It has become the vehicle of decentralization, of real individualism.

All this is contained in one single statistic: Seven out of ten families in the United States have one or more pleasure cars.

There are other statistics which reveal the new character of America. (Please turn to page 274) ican life and, more importantly, indicate its promise of abundance for the near future. Of the 48, 500,000 homes of America:

- 96% have radios
- 94% have electric lights
- 75% have washing machines
- 73% have telephones
- 73% have television
- 57% have vacuum cleaners
- 31% have mixers
- 25% have electric ranges
- 23% have portable electric heaters
- 14% have freezers
- 9% have ironers
- 4% have garbage disposal units
- 4% have air conditioners (room units)
- 3% have dishwashers

Several factors illumine these figures. To begin with, the rate of increase: "In 1940," Morris Ernst has recently written, "Only 83 per cent had radios, only 17 per cent had electric lights." Moreover, nearly three million vacuum cleaners, more than one million electric stoves, and 1 230,000 air-conditioning units were sold in the single year 1954!

We might put it another way. The luxury item of yesterday, owned by the richest few—washing machine, vacuum cleaner, refrigerator—is the necessity of today, owned by the many. The luxury item of today—automatic ironer, dishwasher, air-conditioner—will be the commonplace possession of tomorrow. Nothing in American life seems surer. It is why the term consumer or people's capitalism is so often applied to our economy.

Let's take the 85 per cent with refrigerators (in 1940 it was only 44 per cent) and the 14 per cent with freezers. In America of the 1900's (and in the vast majority of the world today) "people were virtually without fresh fruit and green vegetables from late autumn to late spring." Mr. Allen's The Big Change reminds us. "The result was that innumerable Americans were in sluggish health during the months of late winter and early spring, when their diet was short of vitamins."

TODAY that is no longer true. We have these vegetables and fruits all year round. What if the freezing and processing of them means that they lose some 10 per cent of their food value? Increase in the quantity of our consumption has more than made that up. What is history-making here is the real possibility of buoyant health for an entire population—a health not known previously by even the wealthiest.

To live life abundantly, one must have the physical capacity, the state of buoyant health necessary for it; otherwise any discussion of the abundant life is academic and uninformed.

Who knows, in this connection, whether or not the bleak pessimism of one postwar philosophy derives more from the malnutrition and vitamin deficiency of its philosophers than it does from a clear view of the actual condition of man? In any event, it's doubtful if its philosophers, who decry the materialism of American life, have experienced the unexpected spirituality of a more than adequate diet.

We return again and again in this article to the spiritual meaning of our material civilization. For more and more it has become the new promise of American life.

For instance, Mr. Ernst, in the work from which we have quoted, significantly titled Utopia 1976, does not stop with citing figures for the increased consumption of food or the rapid rise in construction of houses.

"It seems to me," he writes, "that the prime reason for man's labor is far beyond the battle for food and shelter. We live fully only when we attend to the needs of the spirit, and aspire to a creative life."

SIMILARLY, Mr. Lyman Bryson in The Next America reports on the cultural revolution already occurring in American life, "the creation of a national community in which energy is more and more shifted from material and practical anxieties to the doing of things for the sake of greater human experience."

"We shall be doing things for their own sake," Mr. Bryson prophesies confidently. "which means for the developing experience they give, for the demands they make on personalities for greater power and sensitiveness. And it is part of our recovered wisdom to know that we live not to pile up comfort nor ornaments, but for the quality of experience itself."

These men, like most Americans, are optimistic about the future. It is perhaps one of the attitudes most characteristically American.

It is based, in part, on the clearly visible progress we have made from the past. And, in larger part, on their confidence in the individuals of a democratic society.

More important than the physical resources of America is this confidence in the inner resources of dynamic, democratic man. If it were simply a matter of our continental richness, then Brazil, China or even Siberia, with their own vast resources, would be among the leading areas of the world in standards of living, which, of course, they are not. As H. G. Wells has pointed out, primitive man froze to death on a ledge of coal. Natural resources exist only for those who develop them.

Industrially this seems beyond argument. In the home the same story is unfolding. The new democracy of culture, like the new economy of democracy, has meant new richness of experience, of living, of taste, of adventure in creativity. Contrary to the dismal vision of Ortega y Gasset, democratic man has not become mass-man. The despised "common man" has demonstrated uncommon potentiality, once he has been exposed to uncommon possibilities.

ELSEWHERE in this issue, Mr. Bryson describes the result of this principle of exposure in the field of popular reading, where the public demand for better and better books has created a revolution in publishing. In like manner, Mr. Richard Williams tells the story of another revolution—in musical taste, appreciation and desire.

Both articles are concrete, specific evidence of what has happened in a country, where, for the first time, culture has become the province not of a few, but of the many. Instead of declining to a common denominator of tastelessness, it has risen—and, more wonderful to relate, is still rising—to unexpected heights. Both articles are heartening proof of the strength and soundness of the democratic faith: Once men are exposed to the best, they recognize it as the best, and want more.

There is other evidence in the pages of this magazine. It can be seen, most of all, in the architecture of houses for people with average incomes, in their furnishings and possessions, particularly if one is familiar with their remarkable improvement in recent years.

All this is producing change faster than it can be recorded. It antiquates any book on America in less than ten years. And it makes those who are comfortable only in stable, traditional situations terribly ill at ease with the spectacle of America vibrating with activity and energy and turbulence. They call it youthful, when they don't call it infantile.

ACTUALLY it is misleading to call America a youthful nation, whether historically or culturally. It implies inevitable middle-age and eventual tiredness—an end of the American dream as the years pass, rather than the progressive realization of it. It also implies that other nations, being older, have everything to teach America and nothing to learn from it.

In truth America is the oldest country in the world, as an American living in Paris, Gertrude Stein, penetratingly remarked. America was the first to enter the Twentieth Century and slowly the rest of the world is following.

America, to put it somewhat differently, was the first to enter the new world, to make it a way of life and to make that way of life a beautiful one. It was the first to meet with the problems of modern industrialism on so vast a scale and is perhaps the first to have learned to master them. It was the first to have a philosophy of change and is the first to have found stability in change; to have learned the democratic secret that change can be an improvement, and not a disturbance of life, that change can mean growth and progress.

Nor is America the oldest country in the world in the sense that it is the "last flower to bloom on the outmoded tree of European history, doomed to perish in a common totalitarian holocaust." It is something new and different. And we have only begun to understand all the differences. It is different from Europe and Asia to the extent that Europe and Asia will shortly differ from themselves. Change is the order of the day for the entire world, and that change must be met and mastered.

What has often been decried as the Americanization of the world is actually the belated entry of most of the world into the promises and problems of industrialization. The great lesson of the American experience is not mechanization, but humanization; not change, but how

This view of the Paul house, taken from a street above, shows how snugly it fits into its sloping site. On the near side can be seen three skylights in the roof, illuminating the kitchen below. Here, too, you can see the private terrace which is conveniently right off the living area.

It is in the nature of the American home to incorporate anything and everything that one has learned to like. Here we see a sunken tile bath, which the Pauls had admired during their stay in Japan. Why not, then, include it in their own home when they build it? Which they did! To the right is a shower.

MAYNARD PARKER

Architectural interest enters every part of the house, including the kitchen, actually part of the open living area. It is day-lighted and night-lighted (electrically) by skylights, in addition to window light. Kitchen equipment shown here is rapidly becoming standard everywhere.

to meet change, how to have change with built-in stability. We have learned how to achieve full growth as individuals in a society based on mass-production. It is the most priceless knowledge we have. It is beyond our industrial know-how.

This understanding of how to meet change and translate it into progress in terms of human life, not merely in terms of material possessions, is our most important modern discovery. It is the most valuable thing we can contribute to a rapidly changing world, about to undergo experiences we've already assimilated.

Perhaps no one has expressed it better than Margaret Mead in her latest book, New Lives for Old, wherein she tells the story of a primitive people willingly changing their old ways for new ones: "The precious quality which Americans have developed, through three and a half centuries of beginning life, over and over, in a virgin land, is a belief that men can learn and change—quickly, happily, without violence, without madness, without coercion, and of their own free will.

"For three centuries, men of vastly different ways of life have come to America, left behind their old language, their old attachments, old land and river, their betters and their subordinates, their kin and their icons, and have learned to speak and walk, to eat and trust, in a new fashion.

"As we have learned to change ourselves, so we believe that others can change also, and we believe that they will want to change, that men have only to see a better way of life to reach out for it . . .

"We do not conceive of people being forcibly changed by other human beings. We conceive of them seeing a light and following it freely."

If the visitor to America were to see nothing more than this American attitude toward change, he will have seen and recognized a new world, expanding, growing, moving upward as a whole nation, meeting the challenge of endless change with a responsive civilization and culture, all aimed at nothing less than the fulfillment of every man, every day of his life.

THE BUILDER HOUSE

six-foot lengths, because in lumber length costs extra. Then, again, he covers a wall with broad sheets of plywood instead of narrow boards, because it goes on faster. One builder watched his plasterers spend time moving stepladders around. He put them on stilts.

As he looks around inside the house with a cost-cutting eye, he sees plenty to cut. For example, a window: It's just as good, and cheaper, to make it go all the way up to the ceiling. You cut out one horizontal beam and, above it, a piece of wall that's small and therefore extra expensive to build. The same with a door: Why not let the door-opening go all the way to the ceiling and close the top part off with a sheet of plywood? The kitchen sink: If the drain hole is in the usual place, in the middle of the basin, the drain pipe makes the space under the sink useless for storage. Put the drain in one corner, and you gain space for a whole storage cabinet. So it goes.

A more hidden cost-cutting item is a "module." This is something you don't see. It means you design the whole house strictly to a sort of rhythm. Levitt, for instance, uses a standard window unit. He combines several such units to form the sort of window he wants. Now three of his unit windows, arranged above each other, are exactly as high as his door is. This means one beam can be laid across the top edge of door and windows. Next, (Please turn to page 282)

General Electric wall-hung refrigerator (installed as an extra for $595) is combined here with standard cabinets and desk-top, hung from slotted standards in panelized wall system, creating a custom-like pantry and household office corner which doubles as third indoor dining area for children's meals.

Service entry doubles as "receiving room" for laundry, cleaning, and grocery deliveries, etc. Thus when door to corridor is bolted and service-entry door to terrace is left unlocked, housewife is free to be away from home when deliveries are made. Also nicely located for coats and overshoes.

Bath, located between entry and bedroom serves as private bath for bedroom and as guest powder room. It has extra-large, fully-tiled shower with aluminum door. Note that "Moduflex" wall panel system can create custom-planned look, giving no hint of "standardized prefabrication."

the shingles that cover the outside wall of his house are of such size that three rows of shingles equal, in height, one window unit; nine rows of shingles, a door; and so on. There is no time wasted sawing, butting, fitting, filling odd spaces. The basic "module" in this system is four inches; everything in the house is four, eight, sixteen, etc., inches broad, high or thick. Everything comes out even with everything, like boys' building blocks. Kitchen stove, furnace, washing machine are thirty-two inches each and fit into the room exactly, without squeeze, without waste of space. But you can imagine the man-hours of engineering it takes to put a house on a module.

From there, the builder's attention shifts again to construction. What is the most economical way (Please turn to page 288)

Prefabricated "Moduflex" wall-panel system used for most interior walls is joined by vertical slotted steel "splines," which hold standard fittings supporting variety of useful accessories. Book shelves are used in combination with chest, but could be changed as needs or desires changed.

Wardrobe closets are fitted with clothes-hanging rods, shoe and pants racks, shelves, and plastic drawer units, all of which can be adjusted or re-arranged to accommodate men's, women's or children's clothing, thus wasting no usable storage space. Equipment is included in the base price.

Another application of this flexible wall-hung storage system is found in the furnace room. Deep shelf units provide for cushions, luggage, etc., and are placed so as to leave plenty of room on the floor for bulky items, but could be installed easily along the whole wall if needed.

to form a wall, a roof, a partition, a foundation? Some build "post-and-beam" in the Japanese style: only a few uprights, a few strong horizontal beams, the rest a "curtain wall" of some light material. Some build "pre-fab"—the builder prepares the site, the house comes in gigantic trucks, panel by panel, direct from the factory. Or a builder may build his walls flat on the ground, then tilt them up. He builds roof "trusses" bridge-like, also on the ground, then sets them on top to form a roof that spans the whole house. Then, while the interior is still one big hall, he puts the finish on floors, ceilings, walls. Then he builds the partitions—again flat on the ground—and tilts them up.

WHEN the builder's attention shifts to another angle: Who, on a building job, does what, when, where? Big gains can be made here. Levitt, for instance, builds a structure which is surprisingly little changed from the 100-year-old pattern of the American wooden house. The difference is that he has several hundred houses sprouting at once, each at a slightly more advanced stage of completion. He sets up a local work yard where he pre-cuts every piece of lumber to exact size, pre-bends every piece of tubing, pre-mixes his paint. Trucks then go down the line and dump at every house site exactly the right bundle of material at the right time. Then to each site at the right time, comes the right crew and does one job. As the plumber leaves, the electrician comes in and so on to the man who installs the doorknobs.

Which method a builder thinks best depends on the size of the operation, the size of the house, the locality, the attitude of the labor unions, and so on. What's important is not this or that new method, but that new methods are being tried, by all sorts of men, in many different combinations, with many different personal touches. Where there used to be a 100-year freeze, there is now wonderful turmoil.

This is the style in which Americans have done some of their best work—many minds working on the same problem, half in competition against each other, half parallel with each other, but without central co-ordination other than those noisy Annual Conventions, where experiences are exchanged. It is sometimes called the Multiple Effort. It has done miracles in the oil industry, where thousands of independent adventurers, working in this style, have found oil and more oil and still more oil in country that had already been explored and drilled and should by rights have been exhausted. The same method is likely to produce cheaper and better and still cheaper houses in the decades to come.

All this also benefits the wealthy man, who can now buy builder houses of great size and luxury. It also benefits the man who wants to have his own built individually to his own dreams. He now can find a contractor who is not afraid of, say, post-and-beam. He, too, can buy the sink with the drain in the corner, the new rubber floor tile, the furnace that goes in the attic, the plastic waterpipe that doesn't burst when it freezes, the low-cost air-conditioning machine. Most of these things would not exist, or would be very expensive, if Mortgage Insurance had not created this vast popular market. This is a thing that has been often observed in American developments. Without Fords there would not be many Cadillacs, nor many filling stations, nor decent roads. The Few don't really get going until the Many start to move.

Following is a list of construction materials and furnishings used in the house built by Place Homes, Inc., South Bend, Indiana, as shown on pages 230 through 235. (This house was also featured in HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, September 1956, pages 116 through 121.)

level of everything manufactured. For manufacturers could not afford to put such fine design on the market unless they knew that millions would buy it.

These things also work well and durably. The glasses have non-chipping rims; the plastic handles of the flatware are permanently welded to their stainless steel shanks; the dinnerware is designed to withstand the scalding water and detergents of the dishwasher.

This is a great bounty of goods, in the real sense of the word, which our machinery is pouring out. Four linen place mats with a hand-screened fruit print come with four napkins—a striking example of mass production individualized by handwork. Great value for $5.95, Lord & Taylor.

The same low-priced glassware, the same ready-made curtains are being used in the homes of white-collar workers and denim-clad laborers as well as the well-to-do, just as these homes of varying incomes own the same brands of refrigerators. In other words, they are good, they are plentiful and they are cheap.

There is a myth current among those who don't really know: that mass-machine-production means uniformity and, therefore, practically no variety. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The tumblers on page 271 are but one choice in literally hundreds—almost all well designed, almost all good values. The textile world has thousands and thousands of samples for the homemaker to compare, make color schemes with, do anything she wishes. All the pages of this magazine for a year might not be sufficient to show a fraction of all the possibilities in furniture, even if limited to chairs alone.

The nature of our industrial production is such that national prosperity depends on satisfying an infinite variety of consumer demands, because small as they are in any particular region, they add up to a considerable potential in Patterned in squares of silky, lacy drawnwork, this set of four place mats and napkins is stylish and easily washed—a bargain at $6.95. Made by Quaker Lace Company.

A big buy in beauty and easy housekeeping: a tufted cotton bedspread by Cabin Crafts. All-over pattern won't show wrinkles, needs no ironing. Single or double size, $9.95.

our national market of close to 170,000,000. Besides industries that cater to millions, such as the automobile concerns, there are others responding to the thousands and the hundreds, such as the handmade, one-of-a-kind ceramic, weaving, and similar kinds of smaller operations. Somewhere in the great panoply of production is something for everybody's taste and need.

Let any of those who believe that mass-machine-production means less and less variety compare shops in New York with those in London, Paris or New Delhi. The evidence is overwhelming, dizzying.

But even more wonderful, in all this quantity there is an increasing quality. Not because there are self-sacrificing manufacturers who are idealistically interested in elevating public taste. But because the public is demanding better and better merchandise.

If the quality of mass-produced objects is steadily improving, it is because there is a market for them. Why? Because in a society based on mass production, it is the people themselves who decide what the machines will produce. They exercise the real critical power of a free economic society: that of buying or not buying. And this power has more than academic meaning when the market offers a vast variety of good, bad and indifferent products from which they are free to choose.

Manufacturers are keenly aware of this. Their economic existence depends upon their producing better goods for more people at lower prices, so they'll not lose the sales to some competitor. So they are constantly working to improve the materials, processes and machinery that produce their goods. A great chemical company supports an enormous laboratory as large as a little town where chemists and physicists concentrate solely on research in pure science for the purpose of turning up discoveries which may eventually create new fibers, new resins, new finishes or new dyestuffs or methods of improving the products already on the market.

There is hardly a manufacturer of any size who does not support his own testing laboratories. The great stores and the huge mail-order houses (which are the manufacturer's link to the individual customer) similarly test, investigate, choose and discard from the stream of manufactured goods that are made for consumer use.

There has never been greater concentration on design. The manufacturer must, these days, keep constantly in touch with the steadily rising taste of masses of consumers, while he constantly studies the technological problems involved in getting his product made at a price millions can afford.

All of this is accomplished in a highly competitive market, in a sort of race to get to the consumer first, with the most acceptable.

But it is accomplished all the time. For never have so many had so much, for so little money!

If the business is not done this way, it has to be done some other way. It is a safe guess—this being earth and we being human—that none of the ways will be perfect. In this fair spirit, let us, then, turn our back on caricature and suspicion, and let us look at capitalism as (1) a method of creating goods, as (2) a method of distributing them, as (3) a climate of opinion for enjoying what we make and get.

1. Production. As a method of getting foods grown and goods produced, capitalism finds its genius in individual savings turned to corporate use, and it achieves its easiest justification in the superior quantity of goods that get produced. We speak of it as "large-scale" production, which it is. But it is so because it encourages private effort, it stimulates individual savings, and it rewards in investment with interest or dividends. By pooling our personal savings, we make "capital" available for doing things in a big way: inventing machinery, erecting factories, constructing warehouses, promoting railroads and highways, and, in a thousand ways, turning individual energies to public account as well as to further private profit.

President Eisenhower (then General Eisenhower) quotes Marshal Zhukov as saying about our system—though he made it as a charge—"that we induced a man to do things by telling him he might keep what he earned, might say what he pleased, and in every direction allowed him to be largely an undisciplined, unoriented entity within a great national complex." It is so, much as the Marshal says.

This is only one of the ways of handling production. Another way is much simpler: a productive system, for example, where one does everything, or most things, by hand. Such machinery as there is among many backward peoples is made by hand and is operated by hand, with hardly more product than two hands can wrest for hungry mouth from reluctant soil. If mouths come too fast, as they often do, the hands cannot keep up with hunger; and famine or war takes off the surplus of bodies which the productive system could not sustain.

Those are only two ways, but

In that photo on page 270, you might note these elements which characterize the furnishings as being of good, contemporary design:

First, they have a cleanness of line. The busy, vulgar ornament of yesterday's popular furniture has given way to cleanness, directness and simplicity. (An example of the type of sofa mass-produced in the 1910's is shown in contrast with one of today on page 301. There is also an analysis of the improved construction of today's sofa.)

Second, they are not all looks and no performance. They are made of extremely durable and easily cleaned materials: Curtains are of sturdy but handsome glass-fiber, virtually foolproof and permanent; sofas and chairs are covered with leather-like vinyl plastic (thus the pure white sofa can be wiped pure and white by a damp cloth); the flooring is of vinyl tile and equally washable; and the tops of the cocktail table and the four servers (or stools) at both ends are of highly resistant plastic laminate that can also be wiped clean with a damp cloth (table and four stools sell for $120).

Returning to the white sofa, there is a very interesting and significant story to be told about it, one that in itself might prove the case for the rapid rise in the level of public taste:

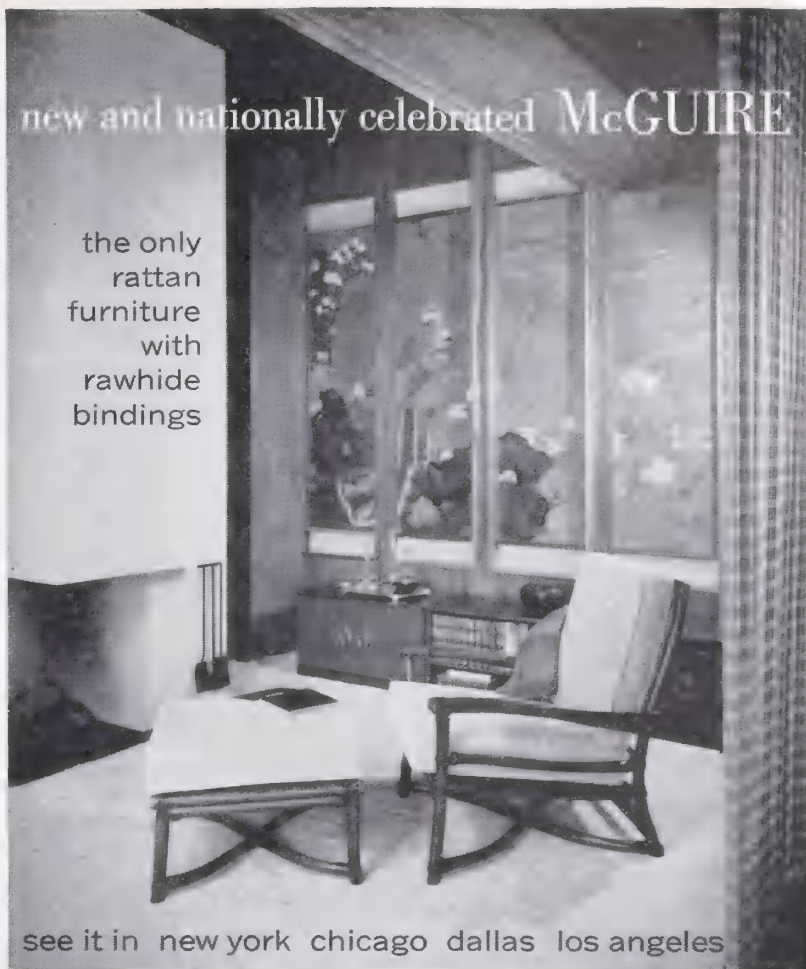

The sofa with which it is contrasted and the type of furniture which it represents not so long ago accounted for approximately 90 per cent of the sales of most mass-producers of furniture. Only 10 per cent was of what might be called good design. Today, it is just the opposite: 90 per cent of the furniture sold is typified by the new white sofa and only 10 per cent is the soap-coupon type.

Here the experience of the Kroehler Company, manufacturers of both sofas, is revealing, for they will do a yearly volume of $80 million. The new sofa is one of their best-selling items (retails at about $160 as shown or in nylon). Since it was made available, only a few months ago, it has sold to the tune of roughly $500,000.

SO GOOD—FOR SO MANY

most of the houses of that period and you'll probably come to the same conclusion as professional designers and critics: Taste has improved; by and large people are discarding what is not good for what is. In other words, eventually, democracy is highbrow. Give people enough time; show them the best, make it available to them at prices they can afford and eventually they will recognize it and choose it for themselves.

We at HOUSE BEAUTIFUL are constantly impressed by the rising level of popular taste. For six years we have been asking the leading manufacturers of home furnishings—fabrics, wallpaper, carpeting, as well as paint—to show us the top three best-sellers for each year.

We have collected actual samples of these top winners in a special room, where they are hung on the walls, grouped by year, by industry, by company, by product type. They represent more than three billion dollars worth of sales.

They are eloquent proof of a fact that is becoming more and more recognized by responsible manufacturers in America: public taste is much better than its critics say it is, and it is improving all the time. There is not a single bad design among these best-sellers and the majority of them are outstanding.

Never have so many wanted so much and of such good quality.

And never has industry supplied so much of it.

For foreigners or for those who are too young to have witnessed for themselves this rise in the level of public taste, a comparison of the Sears Roebuck or Montgomery Ward catalogs of today and 25 years ago would be immensely informative. They should look at pictures of the clocks, toasters, chairs, stoves, sewing machines, plumbing fixtures, and what not, offered, say, in 1925 and those offered today.

Here is proof in terms of mass-produced and mass-desired merchandise of the rise in public taste, which we have been describing.

Commenting on this phenomenon, industrial designer Henry Dreyfuss has written:

"Given an opportunity to have fine things, people generally choose them. As a result, the American home and office have become standards of good taste throughout the world. . . .

"As more products of American design find their way into the shops and homes of Europe, or are imitated by European manufacturers, the same metamorphosis will occur there as has taken place here [a great rise in public taste]. At last we are repaying the debt of culture to the Old World with well-designed, mass-produced goods.

"Someday, the housewives of the world may join American women in keeping house with less physical effort, surrounded by objects that will sharpen their over-all taste."

In conclusion, Mr. Dreyfuss says:

"I believe that man achieves his tallest measure of serenity when surrounded by beauty. We find our most serene moments in great cathedrals, in the presence of fine pictures and sculpture, on a university campus, or listening to magnificent music.

"Industry, technology, and mass production have made it possible for the average man to surround himself with this serenity in his home and in his place of work. Perhaps it is this serenity which we need most in the world today."

It is comforting and encouraging for all those who have faith in the democratic process to know that it works as effectively in the market place as it does in congress.

In the long run, people can be trusted to lift themselves higher and higher, if the way is open—and kept open—to them. And in doing it, they will be creating a contemporary culture with a liveliness and vitality far beyond the frozen forms and patterns of more traditional and conventional societies, where the people are not so trusted or widely encouraged.

CURTAINS: Curtains made of "Velglas," by Thortel Fireproof Fabrics, Inc., New York, from Fiberglass Fabric Shop, New York.

FLOOR COVERING: "Boltaflex" vinyl tile, Bolta Products, Div. of The General Tire & Rubber Company, Lawrence, Mass.

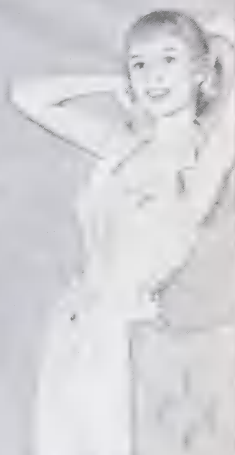

Compare sofa made in 1917 with one below made today by same Kroehler Company. Note improved quality of design. Note also that for equivalent price, today's sofa offers more material value too. 1917 sofa had webbing which sagged, jute which broke, loose cotton which matted, and no separate cushions (you sat directly on the seat's base springs). 1956 sofa, as cut-away sketch shows, has: 1. Better wood and joining. 2. Back bolted to arm and screwed to uprights. 3. Back springs of 30 single-coned premier wire, fastened and stabilized to prevent sagging. 4. Covering of burlap and 4 heavy layers of felted cotton. 5. Separate cushions of 63 individually muslin-pocketed units, double-coned premier steel springs. 6. Cotton felt. 7. 100% latex foam rubber. 8. Steel tie-plates joining front rail and stumps. 9. Crossed crimps supporting and locking seat springs. 10. 40 single-coned-wire-balanced under-construction. 11. Premier edgewire attached to springs with metal clips. 12. Rubberized sisal insulator. 13. Seat roll of rubberized sisal, fiberboard and upholstery, machine-wired-stitched and anchored to pre-formed edge. 14. Stabilizers adding tension to front corners and preventing floating and shifting of springs, as in 1917 sofa.

in San Francisco to do some that would be closer to their ideas of the logical use that should be made of rattan. They retained Leonard Linden and Eleanor Forbes for this, and had their new designs made in the Philippines. The new things caught on like wildfire and they had a runaway success to manage. They had to learn a tremendous number of things mighty fast. They had no friends or relatives in the furniture business, so there was no help from outside.

Here the elastic American business system showed itself for what it really is. They had to have credit to import and buy fabrics and cushions. They had only their limited capital and their youthful enthusiasm. But the open-credit system of American business, which is based on confidence in people, in our economy and our political stability, is set up for aiding enterprising persons like the McGuires.

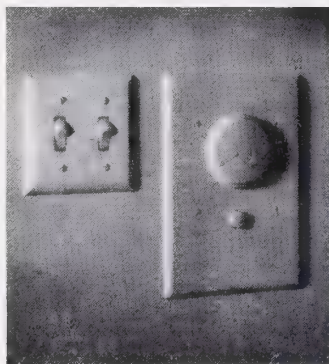

The working of the system took tangible form, this time, through the Simon Mattress Company (a Serta Associate) which sold them as few as six cushions at a time, at rock-bottom prices. Then, when they turned to other resources, they could offer the name of Simon to show they had a good credit standing. So Simon was an open sesame for them. He gave them credit and was a credit reference too. It was an entering wedge for all. Soon they had a small credit rating with the Foreign Department of the Wells Fargo Bank, where their youth and enterprise counted. Thus they could get furniture and rattan sent from the Philippines without paying in advance and thereby tying up their small capital.

In this way the McGuires were the beneficiaries of the American credit system, which literally creates money and gives even a small business the chance to grow, to prove its potentials. It is a practice now universally accepted as sound and secure. It is nothing less than the expression of business confidence in the future of America—and as yet no one has bet on the future of America and lost.

Their whole experience as a young, beginning firm has made them equally generous with other new people in business. They let (Please turn to page 304)

The McGuire dining room is, of necessity, a passage between front and back of house, so furniture was placed with this in mind. A pair of old Japanese screens over buffet are dramatically lighted by Klieg lights set into ceiling, which may be controlled by Luxtrol dimmers. Dining table is lighted the same way. Bulky radiators were removed and replaced with Trane baseboard heating, helping to make arrangement possibilities for furniture in many ways.

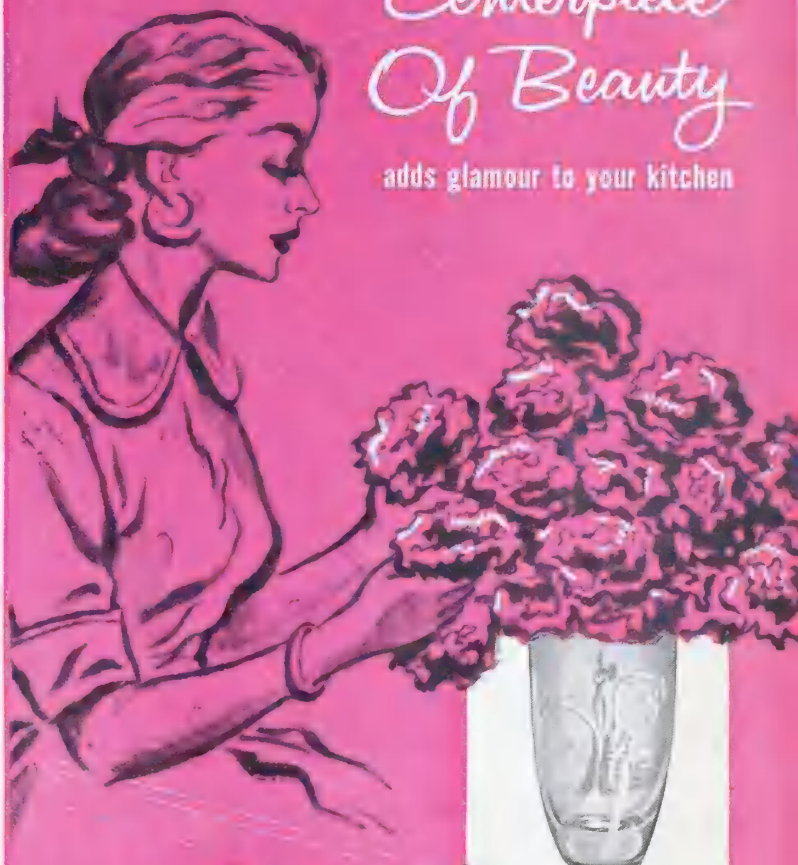

Major structural change in McGuire remodeling was the lining up of the doorways between rooms on the main floor. Some doorways were also heightened to add to the effectiveness of this new visual axis. View above is taken from the living room, looking clear through house to the garden deck. Glass doors were replaced with teak.

The McGuire house is a city house with a "railroad plan," causing the center rooms to serve as passages to other rooms. Lining up all the doors between these rooms on a central axis helped make a virtue of this necessity. Narrow areaway existed between their house and next property line. This was enclosed with a high fence to give privacy, and a catwalk was built at level of main floor to permit walking from front hall back to the garden deck without going through the other rooms. (The complete garden story will be published in HOUSE BEAUTIFUL during 1957.)

them open an account with their company with very little credit rating. "They must start some time," Elinor says.

This is a matter-of-fact way of doing things in America. The McGuires have gone through it and know it works ideally.

But this is not to say they have not worked hard. The first year, John uncrated, assembled, finished, repacked and sold all the furniture. Elinor conducted the office part of the operation—correspondence, accounts, cost accounting, personnel, conducting the showroom. Everything was new to them, and they had to learn as they went along.

As a result, they are a wonderful combination of taste and practicality, energy, youth, hard-won know-how, daring and financial soundness.

We were discussing success. John said: "Success? It depends on what you want out of a business. It's not the money. It's the fun of achieving the goal you've set. Anyway, that's what I think real success is.

Maybe it's doing something that people need and appreciate, and getting satisfaction out of what you're doing."

John is the out-going, informal one; Elinor, the more formal and restrained. Both are in the business together. There is never any doubt about that. It has knitted them together like few couples. John says their son Don's first words were, "Don't talk business." Because it is their great vocation and avocation, they are always working, and enjoying it too.

"Our hobby," John said—or was it Elinor? "is projecting ideas about our business. There is no phase of it we don't like, unless it's the personnel aspects. We neither of us like controlling anybody. We wish we had someone who would do it for us, because we can't!" (They now have 22 people on the payroll.)

They say: "Everything we learn and see applies to our business."

When asked what they do for diversion, they said, "It's very re-

Front hall of McGuire house, "before" and "after" old many-paned windows were replaced with simpler ones. Huge radiators were replaced with Trane baseboard heat. Woodwork was painted to bring out graceful curve of the arch. "Twin house" next door has same windows in same place formerly staring at each other. Now they share common garden wall for privacy.

Wherever there were windows in this old house there was a radiator too. This was common practice in the early days of central heating, and makes it hard to furnish a room. The McGuires replaced nearly all the radiators with baseboard heat by the Trane Company. This is so inconspicuous that you can hardly notice it, and it enables you to place furniture anywhere.

laxing for us to go to a museum and look at furniture."

This attitude is typical of the best American business executive, who finds his work so enthralling and related to every aspect of life that he finds meaning in every thing about him for his work. He knows that every thing in life affects every other thing, even though the connections may be remote and missed by some people.

This feeling that they must keep growing—in a personal sense as well as in a business sense—motivated the McGuires to send Elinor on a trip around the world. John had seen the Orient, but Elinor had never been farther than Canada. So they decided she should go, in the fifth year of their company, for the broadening and educational value it would have, and because she could call upon their suppliers in Japan and the Philippines and help them develop a new construction system they were inaugurating. She could also get a first-hand feeling for the problems of their foreign vendors.

She took wonderful three-dimensional pictures, so John could know what she had seen. But mainly she (Please turn the page)

She keeps
all the windows closed,
BUT still her house
is dirty!

You know the type—won't open a single window for fear that flying dust and dirt will undo her really conscientious efforts to keep the house spick-and-span. But despite this extra caution, she still has her problems with gray-looking walls, woodwork, curtains and drapes.

The cause of her trouble is the multitude of fine dirt particles that come sailing through the conventional filters in the warm air heating or air-conditioning system, every hour of every day. The cure is PLIOTRON—the world's first fully washable, electrostatic air filter.

PLIOTRON is made with a special filter medium that carries a safe, self-generating electrical charge which acts much like a magnet to attract and capture up to five times as much fine dirt as ordinary filters. Moreover, because it loads across its full depth, PLIOTRON takes longer to become dirty. Then, when finally dirty, PLIOTRON is readily restored to like-new efficiency with a quick bath—can be used over and over again.

PLIOTRON costs more than ordinary filters, but the difference is more than made up by its re-usability, by savings in cleaning and redecorating bills and by reduced air system maintenance, most of which can be traced to faulty filters. But for the full story on PLIOTRON and cleaner air at lower cost, see your heating and ventilating dealer or write: Goodyear, P. O. Box 288, Akron, Ohio.

McGuire stairway was modernized by giving it a new balustrade with posts of teak. Posts were enriched with bands of black iron, inlaid with silver, designed by Lowell Groves and manufactured in India. Thus were the small things about the obsolete house freshened and made contemporary as well as personal.

photographed things that would be inspiration for their work. She photographed iron balconies in Venice because of their lacy effect that might inspire rattan. She photographed the joints of things. "I never realized there were so many ways to join things together." When you see her pictures you realize she was traveling with a purpose, but if you had seen her taking the pictures you would have thought she was just one more tourist taking sentimental postcard pictures.

The McGuires feel that their new home, pictured in this issue, is a reflection of what they have both learned from foreign travel. They feel it is a merger of European, American and Asiatic—uncluttered and cool, with Oriental details and enrichment. They regarded their new house as an experimental laboratory where they could see how their furniture could be used in every room of the house—as if it were an extension of their show-room.

As a case in point, we made a list of where different things in their house came from. Here it is:

JAPAN.....wallpaper, hardware, push-plates, screens and shoji
CHINA (HONG KONG).....teak doors, table in living room
INDIA.....brass hardware, silk rug, chaise in bedroom
PHILIPPINES.....rattan furniture
SIAM.....carvings over door
MEXICO.....andirons and hardware in several places
INDONESIA.....chest in bedroom
ENGLAND.....desk in living room
ITALY.....marble
PERSIA.....rugs
SOUTH AFRICA.....brasses
TURKEY.....rugs
SPAIN.....rugs
SWITZERLAND.....light switches
AUSTRALIA.....marble and rugs
SWEDEN.....hardware
DENMARK.....leather chair
FRANCE.....bed

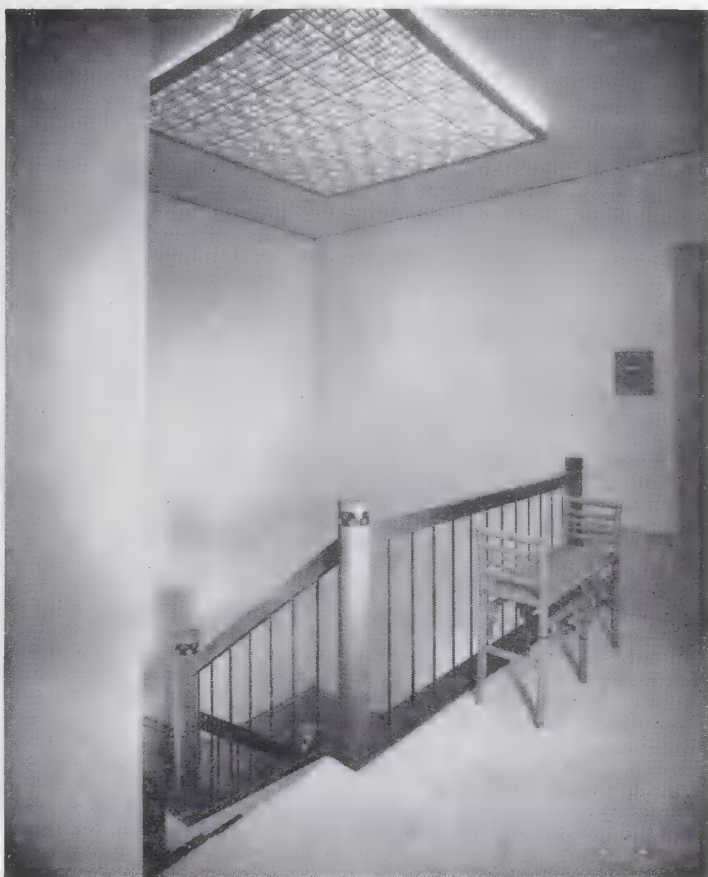

This list is not unique, and it will become increasingly representative as America imports more, and as our people travel to more and more foreign countries.

The story of the McGuires illustrates why our country is youthful. When someone has a new thing to contribute he gets his chance. As a result our total way of life is enriched by many contributions. Just as there is richness of opportunity so there is richness in the rewards—both to the people who make the contribution and to the society as a whole which thus has an enlarged set of possibilities from which to choose.

So, the talents of our people go into broadening as well as deepening the possibilities of our way of life, rather than being channeled into replenishing past patterns that benefit only a few.

The McGuires are not untypical. They are merely one more example in the long series of Horatio Alger stories that “anybody can make good.” no matter how humble may be his start. The thing that is not generally understood—at home or abroad—is that “making good” is (Please turn the page)

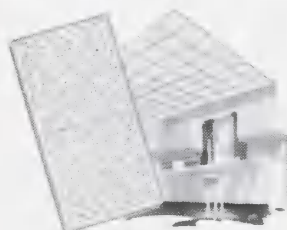

A skylight at the top of the stairwell was covered with a Japanese shoji which the McGuires imported from Japan. At night, electric lights give the same effect as day light, but the light is controlled with a Luxtrol dimmer, which is left on the low level all night, in case the children get up and roam around the house.

Here we are looking from garden toward rear of house and screened-in terrace-porch outside kitchen, which gives family a covered area for the outdoor living that they enjoy.

to remodel to meet today's individual needs, without destroying any of its early charm and beauty.

When artist Charles D. Saxon bought this 200-year-old New Canaan farmhouse located on Weed Street, formerly known as Whiskey Lane, it had been up-dated many times. A two-story wing had been added years before in one of three major remodeling projects. The original kitchen, with its huge fireplace and Dutch oven, had become the dining room. The parlor, with a large fireplace surrounded by pine cupboards, was extended on a split level to make a spacious living room; wood from the old barn was used for open framing, harmonious with the original.

Narrow boxed-in stairs had been moved and replaced with an open staircase. But the house did not measure up to the needs of the Saxon family, in terms of modern living. The kitchen was disorganized, equipment was outdated and storage space was limited. There was no door opening to the back of the house and the garden beyond. Modern living also called for the addition of an indoor-outdoor area.

In typical American fashion, Mr. and Mrs. Saxon studied ways to change and improve the house to meet their standards for a good life. First on paper, then in pasteboard model, they carefully planned and designed the addition of what they term "the modern living wing."

Working closely with contractor Charles E. Remlin, their approach was simple and direct, in keeping with the old house. A screened terrace-porch paved with flagstone was added at the back, with dining and living areas.

The major remodeling took place in the kitchen. This was completely redesigned with modern built-in equipment, plentiful storage facilities and space for informal family meals, transforming it into a spacious, charming and efficient kitchen. Double glass doors and a large window have opened this room to the out-of-doors. White wood cabinets with doors of natural plywood, the built-in burner units with oven and broiler of stainless steel, are in keeping with the simplicity of the old house.

Large natural skylight just outside kitchen door floods one end of terrace-porch with daylight, which enters room by way of the double, sliding-glass doors and unframed window.

The living room, with its heavy beams, soft pine paneling and wide plank floors, has been extended on a split-level to twice its original size with wood from the old barn.

BERMUDA

Bermuda is only twenty-four miles long, yet within its small area are any number of things which charm visitors into going back year after year.

Bermuda is a group of 365 islands. One for each day in the year, so Bermudians say. Sailing among them is a never-ending pleasure. Golf, tennis, fishing, cycling, picnicking are all-year sports. Bermuda's beaches are wide, pink and soft. The water is blue, inviting and refreshing. Bermuda's houses are unique—an artful blending of white roofs, pastel-coloured walls and massive chimneys. And flowers—Hibiscus, Oleander, Bougainvillea, Easter lilies—splash the Islands with brilliant hues.

Bermuda is only 700 miles from the mainland. It's easy to get to for a holiday whether you go leisurely by ocean liner or speedily by plane. Living is simply solved, too, for the Islands' hotels are noted for their service, food, accommodations and sports facilities. And guest houses open wide their doors to Bermuda's easy way of living.

There are many details to be considered in planning any holiday. But you'll save yourself a lot of time and trouble by talking things over with your travel agent. Helpful too is the Bermuda Vacation Kit which you can get by writing to: The Bermuda Trade Development Board, 620 Fifth Avenue, New York 20, New York.

WE'RE CONSTANTLY UP-DATING OUR HOUSES

Bright yellow Textolite covers the counters of the base cabinets, and the spatter pattern of the vinyl tile floor covering picks up bits of this color. White brick-patterned paper that covers one wall is plastic coated, washable and can be painted. In the space formerly occupied by the entry to the basement, which they moved to the porch, a large wall storage unit was installed.

A section of sliding shelves provides storage for electrical appliances, large casseroles and other utensils. The remaining space is devoted to a walk-in pantry with shelves at either side for storage of food supplies. The Pegboard wall at the back accommodates pots and pans and additional equipment. Pegboard was also installed between the wall cabinets and counters of the double sink and adjoining dishwasher, allowing for small items used every day to be kept within arm's reach.

The biggest problem was bringing in more light, which had been cut off by the addition of the porch. A large skylight installed just outside the glass doors opening onto the porch helped solve this problem, along with the large plate-glass window overlooking the porch and the garden beyond. Designed by the contractor, this window is mounted without a frame and operates on the same principle as the sliding doors. A large simulated skylight over the cooking and cleaning centers of the kitchen, with two recessed ceiling lights, provides good artificial lighting.

One of the results of this remodeling, which pleases the Saxons most, had to do with their decision to remove a small section of wall extending out into the center of the kitchen. In tearing this down, the workman uncovered what he thought was a monstrosity. It proved to be a prize—one of the original handhewn oak supports of the old house. As shown alongside the kitchen table in the photograph on page 245, this adds considerably to the charm of the kitchen and unites old with new.

Undoubtedly this house will be up-dated again and again with changing needs and times. Even now the Saxons are discussing additional improvements. But as it stands, this old historic wooden house is a fine example of American tradition, which is a living tradition. Its paneled walls, oak beams and wide plank floors have grown more beautiful with the passing years, and the house itself has grown in character and interest as successive owners have continued to remodel it. It retains the finest of the past and the best of the present.

Suburban shopping centers, stocked with every necessity, dot the countryside around all our cities.

The significance of America is not in its cities, where most visitors expect to find it. They are glamorous, towering, intriguing, but the fact is that our cities are fast ceasing to be home to most Americans. Our cities have never really been centers of living, as cities are in the old world, where much life is lived in the streets, the piazzas and parks. More than ever before,

American cities are becoming impersonal citadels of commerce. One goes to the city by day to buy, sell and earn a livelihood. Then one leaves at nightfall to travel 20, 30, even 50 miles away from the masonry canyons to the significant part of America—the new, green, spacious places where the air is fresher and where home has come to be.

As a traveller, you might stay in a city for a month with never an inkling of this important aspect of American living. But if you followed the nightly exodus of cars that stream in all directions out of the city, across bridges, through tunnels and along the sleek new highways that lead home, you'd see where the real America begins. Indeed, I urge you to come with an international driver's license so that you can hire a car and drive into these new communities where you can observe with your own eyes what is going on. You can do this rather simply, even if you have no friends to invite you into their homes, for these new communities, these "developments" as they are called, are erected in great tracts (Please turn to page 336) they are two ways of handling the matter of production. Produce men must, or starve; and they may both create and starve, if the productive system falls behind the reproductive system.

There is still another way of handling production, and that is communism. Communism cannot stomach the simple method; that is a stage of human progress now foregone. Under communism, imperialism takes, in part, the form of pride in population. Communism will not accept the means relied on by capitalism. But so long as the ends of the two systems are similar (maximum production of goods), the means are comparable, even though very different. The welkins ring in Russia today with the promise of prosperity. This promise requires large-scale production, and this, in turn, machinery, which produces machinery which in turn produces goods. The difference is that the motive for the process must be public and the rewards not private. Neither private ownership of the means of production nor private profit from individual effort is allowed.

Be the motivation what it may, the simple truth is that in communism not less than in capitalism the imperative is to produce more. Production has greatly increased in Russia. The time is foreseeable, indeed, when Russian production will catch up, as it has not yet done, with European production. But the capitalistic form of production in America is well out in front, and is not likely in any foreseeable time to be eclipsed. If civilization is a race between production and extinction, America is in no imminent danger of extinction.

In terms of production, then, the system of capitalism stands adjudged before the world, shining by its own light and so far putting all competitors in the shade.

2. Distribution. This (which gets more attention today than production does) cannot substitute for production, in the competition of economic systems, though it can to an extent compensate for inferior production. Smaller production more justly distributed might outweigh in competition for human loyalty a larger production unjustly distributed. Many questions are begged by the terms "just" and "unjust." But let it be so. This kind of ambiguity is of the essence of life. The nearest approach to a common conception of justice, as between communism and capitalism, is the notion of equality. That too is ambiguous; but if we arbitrarily resolve the ambiguity by making "equality" mean the same wage or the same amount of goods, we can then compare the distributive systems. Russia does not, for all her emphasis upon equality, achieve as "just" a distribution of her smaller amount of goods as America achieves with her larger amount.

This comparison is crucial, but all that could compensate for deficient quantity of production would be superior quality of its distribution. This compensation is not forthcoming, not even as to income, and much less as to more intangible ways of measuring needs, such as "safety of person and property," such as "deference," which is a universal need. Of this latter a few get nearly all, and the many very little. After all, only a few belong to the party and only party members deserve deference. "Big Brothers," even among party members, have all but a monopoly upon deference.

But returning to the tangible, i. e., the distribution of income, the gap between the best paid and the poorest paid in Russia is very great—greater it is said by responsible estimators (nothing more accurate is available), than the discrepancy of income in America as between the day laborer and the millionaire. And this disparity where "the cult of the Comrade" enters into the daily form of salutation!

Her main maxim runs, it will be remembered, "From each according to his ability, to each according to his needs." Apart from the ironic "need" of the Kulak for liquidation and the "need" of the nonconformist for Siberia, the actual need of the worker for security and of his family for substance nowhere approaches the recognition of the worker's claim in America upon safety, upon income, and most of all upon deference. Our main maxim tops their maxim as our practice shames their practice: "The greatest happiness of the greatest number: each to count for one and none to count for more than one." And this from a maxim as old as one of Cromwell's soldiers: "The poorest he in England hath a life to live as the richest he."

3. Consumption. This brings us up to our last criterion of capitalism, that of consumption, with the freedom which attends both employment and leisure. And what can we say here that will not be understatement of the superiority which the worker has under capitalism as contrasted with the atmosphere of distrust and alarm under communism as we now know it?

All escapees under the Iron Curtain bear witness alike to the wastage from the constant weight of fear. The surplus of capitalistic production, the justice of capitalistic distribution, these—great as they are—are poor things compared with the liberty in which the capitalistic worker produces, the participation with which he distributes, and the secure and confident freedom in which he does what he will with what he has.

The final judgment upon any police state is that no amount of production and no excellence of distribution can make more than barely tolerable the indignity of fear in which the whole enterprise goes forward. Not only does the "comrade" endure taxation without representation; he endures production without participation in its ends, distribution with hardly a word to say as to who gets what.

THESE several criteria do not operate severally, where one can compensate for the other, as we here and there may have seemed to assume. They operate together, or they do not operate at all. The absence of the one spells inoperation of the others; and the presence of one makes for the operation of all. It is the free atmosphere in which the workers of capitalism live and move and have their being that sets the superiority.

But this, of course, swells production and quickens conscience to formulate humane principles of distribution instead of canons of liquidation. The more that is produced, the more there is to be distributed, and the greater the will to distribute it decently. Hunger does not produce magnanimity. The more that is distributed and consumed in contentment, the more production in turn is swelled through surplus energy and superior morals. Real wages have risen in America when, by all Marxist theory, the standard of living should have gone down and down.

We say of our capitalistic society that we have here made more progress in a century and a half than the world had made for six thousand years. With only six per cent of the world's area and one-sixteenth of the world's population, we nevertheless produce nearly one-half of the world's goods, own 48% of the world's electric power, 50% of the world's radios, 55% of the world's telephones, 60% of its life-insurance policies, 87% of its bathtubs.

And all that we say with accuracy enough for rough-and-ready comparison. But what is true—and is more important for our present purpose—is that we have a social mechanism under capitalism which is highly dependable for continuous production. We have a method, that is, of peaceably settling our disputes. It is true that our mechanism is sometimes noisy when changing gears (e.g. when the contract is up for renewal or emendation, like our politics at election time). But it runs smoothly enough on the road to enable us to take long journeys with ease.

Our industrial machine has not fallen into the ruts of dogma, but is ever ready to try new things and to adopt them after testing them. Our American capitalism is a profoundly and an indigenously growing thing. This is the distinctive and the reassuring thing about it. It is an "ism" only in that it is an ambiguous label ready for daily expansion. As we say, ours is a "mixed" economy, meaning that it is free to experiment and is ready to adopt any new thing which seems to work better than the old.

No longer is "social security" a partisan matter in America, nor is it likely to be so again. In times of prosperity the ceiling is left open as an incentive to personal prowess. In times of genuine adversity there are the fruits of previous prosperity to fall back upon: there are already planned governmental works to offer employment, and there is throughout the land the spirit of our people to reassure us that we can equalize ourselves downward, if it comes to that, as we seek constantly to equalize ourselves upward while the trade winds are favorable.

To summarize, then: Our first insurance against poverty is understanding; our second is self-help through effort; our third is patriotism, pride and confidence in our people. We have one another to rely upon. And we have shown ourselves to be the kind of people who help those who cannot help themselves, but first the kind of people who will help themselves as opportunity offers or as opportunity can be created.

Put more concretely, the comparison of communism with our capitalism runs at the present rate of production something like this: The average Russian worker gets a pound of butter (when he does get it!) for some five and one-half hours of work; it takes a half hour in the United States. A cotton dress takes forty-two and one-half hours of work in the Soviet Union, two hours in the United States. A pair of men's shoes, sixty-six hours in the Soviet Union; four hours in the United States. A quart of milk, one hour in the Soviet Union; eight minutes in the United States. A six-tube radio, 275 hours in the Soviet Union; 18½ hours in the United States.

The most remarkable thing about capitalism is its dynamism and its resiliency. It is creative men who make the system, and the dynamic system which, in turn, makes the men. Altogether, it is self-renewing because self-corrective. It is self-corrective because self-critical. And it is self-critical because it is self-confident.

The pride of private ownership and the prod of incentive production—the auricle and the ventricle of capitalism—are the heart of the American way of life. Let us see how widespread and how deeplying is the health of the corporate organism with its resulting independence and morale.

1. Take the Farmer. He has never in America been a peasant, for a peasant implies ownership by someone, and the American farmer, decidedly, owns his own spirit.

This ownership of one's own spirit—that is the important thing. This has been preserved and even produced by another difference which characterizes the American farmer: He has not traditionally lived in villages and daily taken a "collective" self out to his land; rather, he has lived alone on the land, and has weekly brought an "independent" spirit into town for supplies and company.

Country solitude has given him time and has furnished him incentive to think his own thoughts, instead of airing as his opinions the more or less unconscious "Gallup Poll" psychology of peasants in other lands who live in the atmosphere of custom, made dramatic through daily gossip.

To a large extent Jefferson was right in his feeling that agrarian living made for independence of character. Whatever else he may own, the American farmer owns at least the "breathing space" around him. Every farmer is his own capitalist, and those who culminate the lure of the land with ownership thereof are capitalists in deed as well as in thought.

2. Take the Industrial Worker. In America the industrial worker has traditionally owned his own tools; and this has made for responsibility in their care and for pride in their use. Nor has decline in that practice made his plight the tragedy which communism predicted. According to Marxian dogma it should have, but the American is not a slave to theory, like the Russian. The practice has been for the industrial worker to compensate for his weakness as a landless and toolless individual with the collective strength achieved through trade unionism. This inventiveness was not foreseen by the Marxist, who expected men to accept their fate lying down (until aroused to revolutionary activity by Marxist propaganda). In America the sense of independence is kept alive in off-hours by a growing amount of home-ownership and a pervasive air of individualism.

3. Take the Intellectual. The "egg-head" in America is a capitalist at heart. The Illinois University professor was typical enough in spirit, though untypical in his vast success, who played the stock market on never more than a $6,000-a-year salary and ran his holdings up to almost $1,000,000. And in nothing was he more typically American than in willing all of it to his university, which has hospitably housed him in freedom.

It is true that the intellectual whether as professor or as a professional man otherwise, historically thinks of himself as a critic of Big Business and at the same time a critic of Big Unionism. His freedom is individualism. He is at times pinched by each of them; and in crucial times harder pinched by both as they struggle for power and perhaps interrupt community services.

But one professional man, a lawyer, has recently written the best available defense of large-scale production: Big Business, by David Lilienthal. And another, a professor, has written a most substantial corrective of the monopoly danger in Big Unionism (and for that matter in Big Business): Capitalism, by David McCord Wright. And both men have written what they have written in the exercise of and for the defense of the kind of property which capitalism exists to protect and to preserve.

Property need not be in land or bonds or tools. But whatever it be of or in, it must be privately owned. This is the essence of capitalism. The final property is in deed independence of spirit and pride in skill. This ideal the professional man, and above all the intellectual, exists to serve, and to enjoy. It is not the privacy of property (in the Marxian sense) that distinguishes capitalism; it is the property of privacy, which is finally sacred. All else is means to this end. This is the end-in-itself, and the be-all and the end-all of the good life. It is this end, as we have seen, which conditions production, which humanizes distribution, and which frees consumption from envy and fear.

Every American His Own Capitalist

This conception of property is no fanciful distinction which I have drummed up at the end of a literary device to dramatize the fact that in America the "bloated" capitalist is you and I made powerful of sinew and health from the ozone of aspiration which we daily breathe. No, it is a distinction which is basic to our Republic, was present at its founding, and has never been wholly absent in the crises of our history. We invoke this distinction in our struggle with communism. It was made explicit and put to work by James Madison, the Father of our Constitution; but it was used by Thomas Jefferson to infuse his whole program with the proper spirit. Madison writes:

"A man has property in his opinions and the free communications of them. He has property of peculiar value in religious opinions. He has property very dear to him in the safety and liberty of his person. He has equal property in the free use of his faculties and free choice of the objects on which to employ them."

In a word, as a man is said to have a right to his property, he may equally be said to have a property in his rights.

Capitalism, we may now repeat to the tune of Madison's noble refrain, is only one system of production; but it is the one which turns out the goods; it is only one system of distribution, but it is the one that most approximates to justice; it is only one system of consumption, but it is the one, the only one, which in the modern world lets the farmer and laborer and professional man and industrialist get the most of the bread that he earns and eat that most in peace and safety. The capitalist is only the individualist become self-supporting.

Let us get all this, now, in brilliant perspective. Let us finish a story already touched upon earlier. Marshal Zhukov told General (now President) Eisenhower, when the two world-renowned warriors met and fraternized at the Elbe, that our (American) system "appealed to all that was selfish in people . . .

We induced a man to do things by telling him he might keep what he earned, might say what he pleased, and . . . allowed him to be an unoriented entity within a great national complex . . ." But their system, the communist warrior continued, substituted "for such motivations the devotion of a man to the great national complex of which he formed a part." But the Marshal went on, in typical littleness of spirit, though under the dominance of an ideal so majestic, to demand of Eisenhower that he suppress an American magazine which had published something (trivial, in fact) which the Marshal did not like. In his country, said he, "I would see that the magazine ceased operations at once . . . What are you going to do?"

Who here is the "bloated" boss, Eisenhower or Zhukov? Who here is drunk with power? Who here takes the "surplus value" of a civilization and turns it sharply against the "toiling masses" who have made it "surplus"?

The truth will slowly emerge; but it will be manifest in the end. Then it will be seen that capitalism is not to be conceived in any static terms. It is a collective adventure for the enhancement of individualistic ends. It does not represent the acquisitive but a dynamic way of life. Capitalism does not put emphasis upon the making of money, as many think, but upon the making of money, as the successful business man knows. It is not the goal, it is the freedom of going, ever going on.

The miserly spirit may fasten upon anything and everything, but its joys are morbid, and its rewards are stagnant. It is the acceptance of the process which is the glory of America. The growing spirit bends ever forward to welcome the future with no less eagerness than it waves good-bye to the past. It is the touch of growth which works the magic.

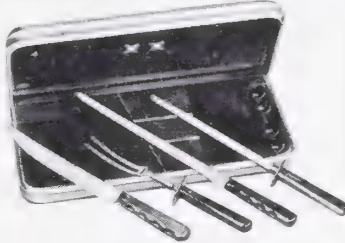

Capitalism is mankind's most creative invention. It takes the luxuries of the few and turns them into necessities for the many. It created goods, in surplus; it creates and distributes purchasing power to absorb the goods so plentifully produced; it creates an atmosphere in which men can enjoy not only their products but, most of all, can enjoy their betters, without disdaining any as inferior.

The People's Capitalism is, in short, creativeness reduced to utter concreteness. It is human inventiveness made self-supporting, made self-rewarding, made self-renewing.

enough to take over this wing as their own. The fourth zone is the upper floor, where the master bedroom surveys the whole domain with absolute privacy. (The adjoining bedrooms and study are for the children while they are young.)

The kitchen is in the center of the whole plan, accessible to any of these four sections without intrusion on the others.

In interweaving and developing the plan of this dwelling, in creating the most desirable circumstances for family activities and personalities, and in co-ordinating these needs with the type of protection necessary in this climate, this house took its form.

But Mr. Wright goes much further than mere convenience and physical comfort. His buildings are intricate in their plant-like organization and they are rich with patterns and exuberant ornamentation. They blossom with little features, such as the welcoming fountain at the car-court entrance or the massive fireplaces that mark the gathering places inside. As buildings, they do all they can to add charm to the activities of everyday life.

These houses achieve their beauty and individuality on "machine-made" terms. Standard machine products and machine processes, once dreaded as "poetry crushers," are used here as the greatest means toward family homes of the utmost individuality, complete with rich refinements in detail. And since these products of machine production are used in ways natural to them, they become a dignified, not alien, addition to the natural scene.

Happy Rooms

A novel display of scale model rooms is now touring Europe. Called "Happy Rooms," it highlights new Swiss wallpapers. It struck us that this theme would be just as fitting over here. For wallpaper—American or European—does make happy rooms. Of all the products at our disposal for decorating our air-conditioned, centrally heated, many bathed, generously applanced homes, wallpaper offers the most ideas.

Architects will tell you that wallpaper has the happy knack of lowering or raising the height of rooms . . . making them seem smaller or larger . . . brighter or more subdued. A talk with a psychologist reveals that wallpaper does for the home what a new hat does for a woman, or a tie for a man . . . gives it a brand new lift in spirit.

With all these possibilities it becomes apparent that literally thousands of different colors, designs and textures are required in wallpaper to fill not only architectural requirements but individual preference. And because tastes change, new thousands are created each year!

A continuous "tooling up" process for "new models" has been daily routine at Imperial for half a century. Each year Americans can choose from over 1000 new Imperial wallpapers: our popular Imperial Washable Wallpapers; soil-proof, scrubable Glendura Wallcoverings; superb Glencraft papers; fashionable Jean McLain designs; hand printed Imperial scenic murals, and practical, economical E-Z-DU Trimmed and Pasted papers. They all can help make your home happier and more attractive. They absorb sound, insulate, clean easily and unlike other papers come with a written guarantee in every roll.

Like our fellow craftsmen abroad, we firmly advocate happy rooms as part of the American way of living in these mid-century years.

Outdoor room in Arizona house is open clear through. Planted patio and swimming pool are at left behind low wall. Elsewhere, desert growth comes right up to building.

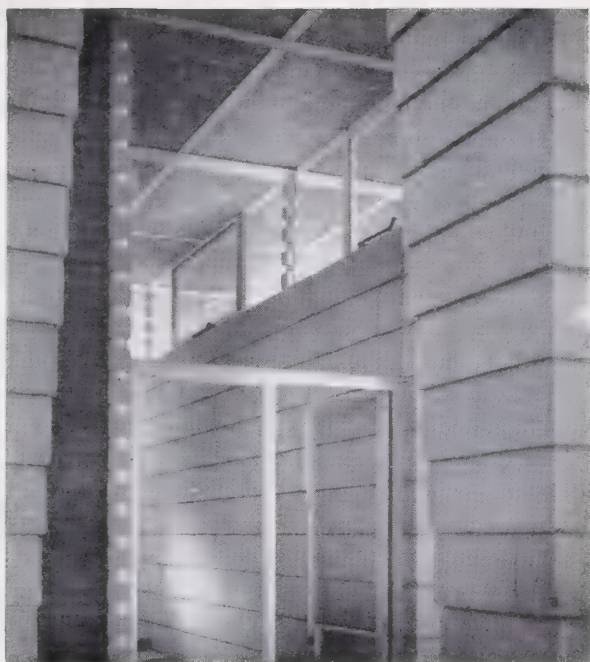

Little fountain at entrance steps splashes thin sheet of water over metal disc, encouraging cooling evaporation. Guest room and carport are beyond, detached from main house.

Night lighting concealed in tops of concrete block piers makes ceilings glow and accentuates poised look of roof. Pool lights under fountain add a sparkling reflection.

Doorway to bedroom wing shows patterned interplay of structural material. Stepped courses emphasize solidity of walls; bright blue cubes seem to punctuate lightness of metalwork.

Bedrooms are lined with fine mahogany walls and cabinet-work. Matching shutters curtain windows. Besides air-conditioning, rooms have good ventilation for cooler days.

Compact and well-lighted kitchen at end of living room is a family buffet or hostess studio for big parties. Central work table conceals four swing-out stools in the corners.

A CULTURAL REVOLUTION IN POPULAR READING

For about 16 years it has been increasingly possible to get a few good books in really cheap paperback editions at any street-corner newsstand or drug store, and there are, of course, the standard medium-priced reprint series. But now there are the new "highbrow paper-backs," selling in tens of thousands, mostly in the book stores, and their success has everyone guessing as to the potential of the American book buyer.

Everyone interested in American culture has a theory about reading and its present state. There is a partial truth in saying that there have always been serious readers who could not find or pay for serious books and some truth also in saying that our engines of enlightenment have produced a new kind of thoughtful person.

I think the facts show that the exposure theory, which really includes these two half truths, is the best explanation and also the best guide for future publishing. No doubt book publishers will continue sometimes to go broke on good books, as they always have done, just as they often make money on trash. They would always prefer to get rich on literature and the new situation may offer hope.

Historically, we can go back to the changes in the American popular magazines, which began long before the changes in book publication raised the question as to how much better the American reader might be than the stuff being offered him. The popular magazines, still in popular ways, of course, began about 25 years ago to try out serious articles.

The editors of large circulation magazines, being vulnerable, have been generally more enterprising and more sensitive than the book publishers to the shifting tastes of readers. The editor of a large circulation magazine is probably paying an investigator to find out who is reading what in his current issue, while the publisher is writing memoranda to his staff asking plaintively why nobody reads anything. (Perhaps that should be put in the past. The publisher has become enterprising also.)

I do not mean to say that the serious interest in the magazine, (Please turn the page)

which has been so noticeable for about 25 years, has been fed by the same kind of fare as is now offered in the new reprints, especially the "highbrow paper-backs." Articles in a woman's magazine on educational problems, or in a picture magazine on the religions of India, are still "popular" in treatment. They make concessions to the layman and do not demand too much attention. The new reprints are far more demanding. But the change could be seen in the substance of popularity.

As I read the record, it was the magazines which did the best work in the new fields that survived and most of the new ones with huge circulations are more serious than those they displaced. As Frederick Lewis Allen remarks in his book, The Big Change, he discovered as the editor of Harper's, then a magazine of ideas of the older kind, that he could not pay even the good serious writers enough to keep them from putting their ideas into the new kind of popular periodical. The expert, the pedant, the cultural snob—and we have plenty of all these—may not be satisfied with present popular versions of their own subjects. To correct their ignorance, the critics should read the magazines that delighted their great grandmothers.

As a matter of fact, Americans have always done most of their reading in magazines, trashy or distinguished, trivial or serious. This is what makes comparisons between our reading habits and those of European populations so misleading. But for a long time, this new responsiveness to the weightier fare that was first tentatively and then generously offered in periodicals was not shown so copiously in the reading of books, or at least not in buying them.

The librarians of public libraries, and especially the reader's advisers, who have a clinical solicitude for the tastes and demands of the book-borrowing public, offer some testimony to the fact that there was a discernible rise in the standards of their patrons. Taste has wavered and varied with political and economic events, of course. It has been getting steadily more serious and readers have quite evidently been willing to demand more of themselves, tackling bigger questions with harder answers.

Whatever improvement may have been taking place in the potential demand for serious books, however,

Taste the difference in water from a faucet with Spring-Flo

Crystal-clear, sweet-tasting water fills your glass from a faucet with Spring-Flo. It comes from the tap in a rushing stream, charged with millions of tiny air bubbles that break and vanish—taking odors, off-tastes and cloudiness with them! Spring-Flo water tastes and looks as pure water should!

You'll find Spring-Flo water better for washing, rinsing, too! The high-velocity bubbly stream mixes soaps thoroughly. Clings, spreads as it rinses, with never a splash. Make sure you get Spring-Flo on your new faucets!

it was for a long time baffled by two obstacles which have nothing to do with taste, potential or developed: Books were hard to find. The important ones were mostly too expensive.

The pioneering work of Pocket Books, the first great modern effort in cheap paper backs, was to find sales outlets for books that would cost about what magazines cost and look somewhat like magazines, with the mammalian cover pictures that trashy—and even some serious—magazines had made conventional. Whether they knew it or not, the pioneers in the regular paper-backs of 17 years ago were catering to established magazine buying habits. Of course, these publications were also disposable, like magazines, in the trash can.

The studies of librarians have shown for many years, however, that accessibility will be, in most cases, the leading factor in determining what anyone reads. Unless we have some very special motive or interest, we read what is at hand. It was probably the expansion of books for sale from about 1,500 book stores, mostly concentrated in big cities and college communities, to more than 100,000 drug stores and newsstands that made the greatest change. The prices, twenty-five and thirty-five cents, helped. Such books at such prices can not generally be handled at a profit in a book store.

The need to stock 100,000 outlets with even one copy of each book published turned out to be a handicap to this effort, and still is. If every edition of every title has to be so large, publishers are less and less likely to take chances on rare or recondite manuscripts.

This makes it amazing, not that the Koran in English, for example, and Ruth Benedict's Patterns of Culture have sold in many thousands, but that they were published in these cheap, plentiful editions.

It is a little less amazing, but not any less gratifying, that a good many solid titles in modern fiction have sold hugely in cheap, brightly-colored paper backs, even when not very popular in their first respectable appearance.

The "highbrow paper-backs," the newest development, are almost all books that have been successful, but not really popular, in their original editions. This is what makes partly valid the theory that the new buyers were eager readers who wanted better books than they could afford. But no innovation even in book publishing can survive unless it can survive in business terms, i.e., show a profit.

Do the highbrow paper books really sell? It will not do merely to point out that Riesman's The Lonely Crowd, probably the most successful book in social science in our time, which the Yale University Press worked up to a sale of about 10,000 copies, has gone over 150,000 in its paper-back edition. Or that Jacques Maritain with Creative Intuition in Art and Poetry is one of the close seconds.

It is more reassuring to note that Brentano's famous New York bookstore has now a whole department downstairs for paper-backs, mostly highbrows, and recently took a full page in The New York Times to invite anyone to come and get a library for himself for $10. The advertisement included a small sales talk; it is a full page of titles, 120 of them. One can see what kind of title these hardened cynics, the book salesmen, think will get customers at prices as low as 75¢ and almost all of them under $1.50.

Here are some random selections: You can get Perry Miller's collection of the writings of American Puritans, or a book of essays by Freud. Jung is here also, if you are partisan. There is Sidney Hook's Hero in History, or you can have Hegel on The Philosophy of History, or Runciman's Byzantine Civilization. For less than two dollars you can get Franz Boas's classical work on Primitive Art with 950 illustrations; even good pictures are inexpensive in these books. There is, for criticism, Virginia Woolf's The Common Reader; for the student of words and their ways, Edward Sapir's masterpiece on Language. There is Catullus, and Unamuno, and Henry James, and James Gould Cozzens.

THE official guide to paper-bound books, published three times a year by R. B. Bowker and Company, and kept up to date, contains over 4,500 titles. If even a tenth of them are substantial works, that is as high a proportion as one can honestly claim for the unco guid, the buckram-bound respectabilities.

Were there 150,000 persons who wanted a David Riesman, but did not have $5? Or were most of the new buyers potential readers who had never happened to hear of Riesman and never found out that they might be interested?

I am inclined to the second answer, but it may not make much difference, even to the publisher, to decide what has brought him these new customers, so long as they continue to read—and buy.

One much bedevilled question of theory is of some importance, however. Whatever effect radio and television and the movies are having on the American public, they have not destroyed reading. In fact, a good many librarians and teachers, with whom I would go along, are beginning to think that these enticements away from reading are also enticements sometimes into new interests for children and their elders also, and that books are sought to feed these interests.

Neither paper-backs nor reprints are new in American publishing, and I am not referring to Frank Merriwells. The sleazy fiction which flooded the reading public of the last part of the Nineteenth Century often came out in paperbacks, but the same stories could be much more cheaply bought in what passed in those days for magazines. Those experiments proved nothing about the future, which is our today.

ON THE other hand, we are not, as is often said, merely following European methods of publishing. Reprints of good books in paperbacks were once successfully circulated by the German firm of Tauchnitz. Their tan-covered volumes were as regularly found in the bag of a traveler on the continent as the Baedeker in red cloth, also German. But the reprints were mostly classics; the serious modern book was not likely to be available, and it is the serious modern book that is so characteristic of our revival in the older paperbacks and in the new highbrow reprints also.

However, we are not yet experimenting very boldly with the French method of publishing, which is to put out all new books in paper-backs. (If the French book sells, then more expensive editions appear.) Only one American publisher has tried extensively, in the Ballantine Books, to float new fiction titles in paperbacks on the regular markets, with as yet uncertain success. It should not be forgotten, however, as an essential part of the French system, that in a French city you can go round the corner—or at least you could when this system was established—and get your paper-back beautifully bound.

Where would you go to get an American paper-back rebound, no matter how precious it might be to you? This difficulty, for technical reasons, makes trouble even for the public libraries. Brentano's, in their advertisement, quoted Emerson as saying that a man's private library is his "harem." It is fair enough to buy a harem for less than $10, but one wants a reasonable degree of durability.

and plumbing, had help by the day to pour hot tar and gravel for the roof, and hired the use of a crane and men to lift the heavy old pine beams into place. Everything else is the work of their own hands.

What adds distinction to this young couple's effort, and sets them apart, is that they had the wit to hire a fine architect to guide them in planning this house. The same Alfred Browning Parker who designed the Marko house (see page 220) drew the plans for this house, and was consulted whenever problems arose.

Many people, thinking to save money, rely on their own design ability and consider an architect and his fee unnecessary. Of course, this is the greatest mistake the amateur can make. The architect lays out a plan that fits the needs of the family, knows exactly how to inject style and simplification into the whole and, best of all, averts those inevitable errors that accrue from inexperience. Nothing is more dampening than to miscalculate some important detail and have to do an onerous job over. Not only is it costly to correct mistakes, but it is also a hideous drag on the morale.

The Litsey house is for two adults and their children, Shepherd and Ann. It breathes vitality from every timber and brick, and for the Litseys it is the perfect house. Started when Richard was piloting a regular run for Eastern Airlines and could count on several days off between flights, the house began with the salvage of some handsome Dade County hard pine, which had been weathering for 40 years as the structure of a nearby abandoned water tower. For the price of hauling the lumber to his site (about $200), he had the basis for the structure of his house that is built by the side of a swimming pool. This was literally lumber that money could not buy, and it is as hard as cement and a beautiful color.

Before the great beams were mitered and measured and put to use again, the swimming pool was built and a water pump installed. Thus while the labor of building the house went on, the family could picnic here and cool off in their own pool. Ten months from the day work started, the family moved in. They have been finishing and improving the house ever since, as is the way with the builders of any house.

All the rooms open directly onto the screened terrace and pool, except the new bedroom extension. The rooms are small, just large enough to serve their essential purpose, yet there is no feeling of limitation, for the eye goes beyond the rooms, past the Persiana doors that stand open in all but the chilliest Florida weather to the great outdoors. There are no visual barriers to the sky, no barricades to stop the welcome breezes. Life is lived more out of doors than in, and here throngs of happy children come to swim, and entertainment is informal and relaxed. A perfect spot for Captain Litsey to let down and relax in!

There is inspiration in this Litsey saga, in that both Connie and Dick threw their energies into this rewarding project. Connie was no passive onlooker. Besides a hundred and one odd jobs in which she shared, she laid all the brick flooring unaided. Such unity of purpose and the bolstering of each other's morale can produce nothing but good.

There is inspiration in this story for all those who would build their own homes with their own hands, like the young Litseys. And it is in the nature of Americans to boldly attempt it. However, one word of caution:

Not everyone possesses the innate talent, the time and the necessary drive to undertake and follow through on such a project. Where such is the case, people can still have the immense satisfaction of doing or helping with the painting and wood finishing, or even the carpentry for the garden and game room, where crudeness is not to be so deplored as in the living room or dining room.

But if you are like the Litseys and have the skill and time to build your house, more power to you!

Here is a list of construction materials and furnishings used in the Litsey house in South Miami, Florida, as shown on pages 236 and 237.

Marketing once a week to save time for more important things means we need generous storage space to hold assortments of canned and packaged foods. Here's how one family solved this need by adding a shallow floor-to-ceiling cabinet built against old existing wall. Shelves are just deep enough to hold a single can or package. In this way every item is in clear view. Left, same cabinet closed, clearly extends out from wall only a few inches. Americans are fond of making such efficient use of little space.

world of the mind which now, while my children are small, I have been missing."

Key words in her remark are "the world of the mind."

Fifty years ago cooking was considered menial by the average American. Now, suddenly, it is being discovered as a fascinating subject, far from mindless. What brought about such a shift? Many factors, of course. But the big change began with the mechanical refrigerator which retarded spoilage. (In 1950, 33,720,000 were in operation in America.) Then later came the freezer. Together they make a noble pair, for they make the daily trip to the market unnecessary, saving hours of time.

Perishables, like milk, butter, eggs, vegetables, meat and even seafoods became staples. Even the cook's time can now be "put on ice." Time-consuming tasks—the preparation of vegetables, the fuss of pastry rolling and shaping, hours of cooking—can all be done ahead of time and set away to be used whenever needed.

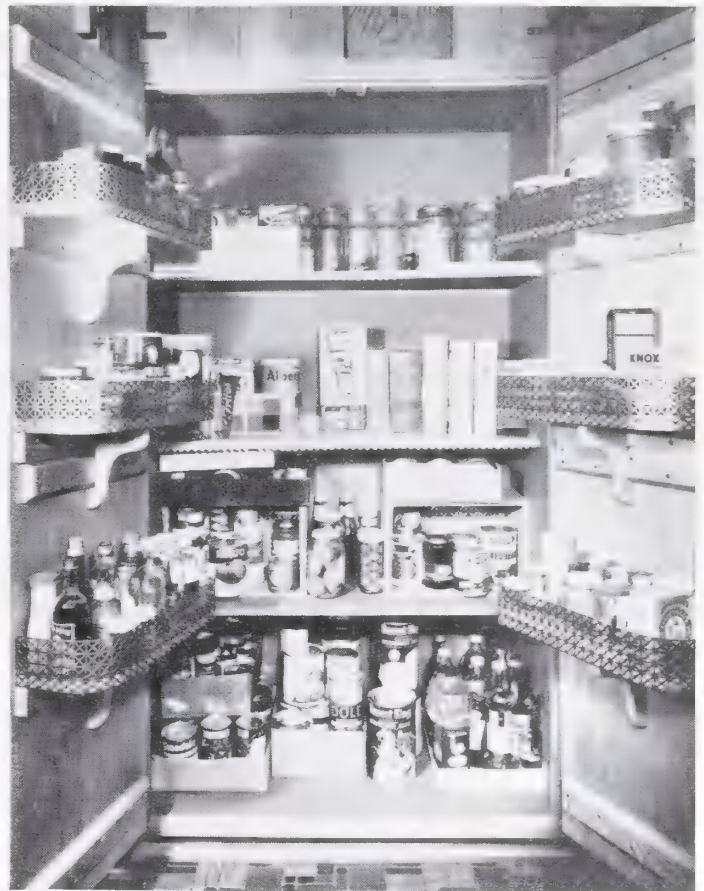

These mighty twins, refrigerator and freezer, have affected American cooking in widely diverse ways. The refrigerator, because it kept food so fresh, encouraged the use of salads, particularly green salads and the popular jellied salads. It made the ice-box cake a favorite company dessert. In many cases it encouraged quick cooking, because it was unnecessary to stew, braise and marinate in order to keep meats.

The freezer, on the other hand, has in many instances had an opposite effect. Many elaborate dishes, almost forgotten for a generation, were revived as the idea of "Chain Cooking" spread. Women were willing to go to considerable trouble, if it meant that they could reap the rewards from one spate of work on several occasions, often months apart.

Recently, too, industry has contributed to this revival of interest in more elaborate foods. Many different types of soups and bisques, sauces, pastas, cheese cake, profiteroles, eclairs and fancy pastries are back again on the American table via the freezer.

Electric blenders and mixers have had much the same effect. The blender particularly has taken the (Please turn to page 338) slowly, is that the woman who can count on two-thirds of her menu coming out of cans and packages feels free to take the time and energy to make a real production of one dish for that same menu.

A typical American kitchen pantry contains a wide miscellany of basic staples, seasonings, sandwich spreads, party "nacks" plus a wide assortment of canned foods—some ready to eat and others to be used as ingredients in cooking other recipes. The deep pull-out drawers of base cabinet allow easy access without stooping or struggling to reach bottom rear area. Shallow shelves on doors with metal galleries also place more items within easy reach.

So we have arrived at a typical American phenomenon. The more we learn, the more we want to know; the more we know, the more we are eager to find new things and to try new methods.

Just as Shen Nung, the wise emperor of China, compiled a cookbook and Dumas père swore that he was born "not to be a writer, but a cook," so are the intellectuals of the United States turning to cooking. They may have been forced into it, but now they love it. A young woman, who is a former philosophy teacher and now a full-time housewife and mother of three small children, puts it this way: "Cooking is my hobby, my extra-curricular love, as well as a part of my family duties. It is also my refuge in time of trouble—my way of working off a fit of temper, of getting peace of mind in the midst of childish chaos. But most important of all, it is my link with the looking at houses for themselves, but had found nothing they could be happy with, even among those that were too expensive for them to consider. They were for other people, perhaps, but not for them.

For months Mrs. Marko hesitated to call Mr. Parker, and then took the plunge. Would he be interested in designing so small a house as she and her husband wanted? He would be delighted, he said, when she phoned. And slowly the house took shape.

The first site was not quite right, so the Markos kept looking until they found what they wanted on a large estate that was being subdivided. It was a fine piece of land with magnificent trees, in an area that offered many pleasurable walks. They bought it for $7,200.

Mr. Parker put aside the first plans he had drawn and began anew. To begin with, he made full and ingenious use of the old concrete blocks that the Markos had found on the site and had bought cheap along with it. (You can see the handsome wall they composed on page 220 and the opposite page.)

Here perhaps was the first point of misgiving, because the Markos couldn't quite see what architect Parker could do with such old and "ordinary" materials. But when they saw them laid up, they were completely won.

Thus, step by step, architect and client together created understanding, confidence and finally a striking house, which the Markos find is the most wonderful thing that ever happened to them, except their happy marriage.

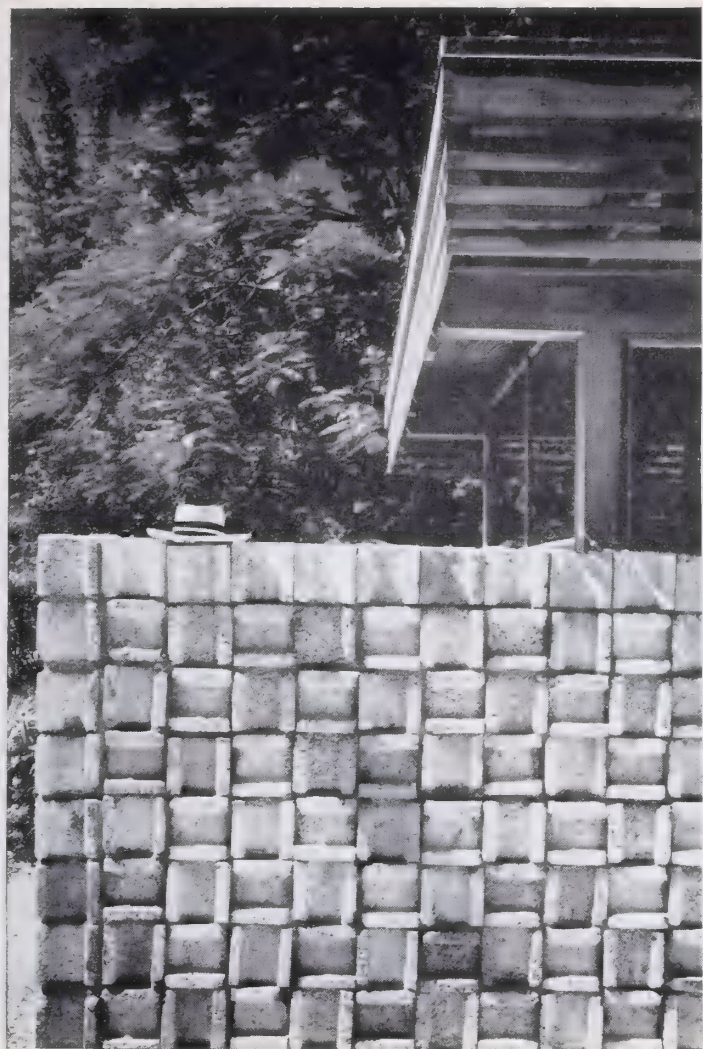

Besides the limits of their own experience with the principles of good architecture, they had a small hurdle of their friends' objections to surmount. "Why go an architect," they were told. "For the same money you could furnish your house."

"Well," Mrs. Marko said, "we never spent money better than by having an architect. He gave us the most beautiful thing in our lives, and we love it more every day."

"It's just what we want. We can live in it, entertain in it, do everything we want to do in it, just the way we like. As for the money it cost us, it is our happiness and that's the way we count it. We could afford to build it, because we gave up some of the small things that other people seem to treasure: jewelry, yes, even minks, going out a lot, and so on."

"Now, we tell everybody who says we live like a king and queen, instead of a hard-working couple. We do indeed! And we don't have to buy tickets for our entertainment. We have it right at home in our house and in our garden. It's saving us money every day of our lives, and it's making every day of our lives so beautiful and full of pleasure that we still wonder about it. You put a price on that!"

And we who have seen many beautiful houses costing much more are glad to agree with Mrs. Marko that she and her husband are living in a home that is quite priceless and of which they can be justifiably proud. It is a princely pavilion of a house sitting comfortably under the shade of a great roof and of spreading banyan and Spanish lime trees.

It is an ideal house for the subtropical climate of Florida, owing to the way it turns into the prevailing breeze and invites it to blow through the entire house from one open end to the other. The umbrella-like roof with its cleverly designed trellis-cornices protects the people in the house from sun and rain. Here there is no need to rush around closing windows when a storm comes up, unless it is exceptionally violent and windy.

Because of the mildness of Florida winters, the tree-room porch-terrace, that resembles a Hawaiian lanai in its openness, can be kept completely open to the living room, almost all the time, lending its green spaciousness to the entire house, making it as expansive and generously sized as the great outprotect the lender against loss. You get your money, as before, from a savings-and-loan association, a savings bank, a mortgage company or a life insurance company. It's still the experienced lender who grants or refuses you your loan, and banks still don't lend carelessly. On FHA-insured mortgages the rule is that a man's monthly payments on his house (interest plus re-payment plus local taxes) must not be more than his weekly wage. The earning power of his wife is not counted and forms a reserve. His character, credit and job record are checked. By now the Retail Credit Bureaus know a lot about almost everybody as a bill-payer.

Note that it's private money that is being lent, not public money. Only the lending institution is protected: You, as the borrower, are looking down the gun barrel as before. If you don't keep your payments up, you lose your house. And it's you, the borrower, who pays for this service (except veterans, who get theirs free from the Veterans Administration, regardless of need, as something they have earned through their service).

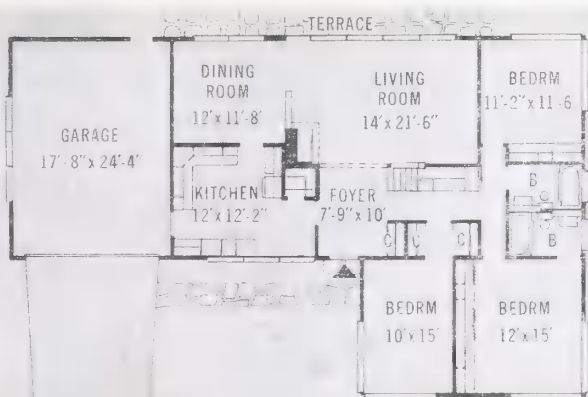

The bank charges one-half per cent a year extra as a mortgage insurance premium. This it pays over to FHA. Out of these premiums, FHA builds up the fund from (Please turn the page) which to repay the bank when a mortgage goes wrong. So this mortgage insurance is no welfare expenditure. In fact, it's no expenditure at all. FHA has been operating at a profit. By now it has built up a reserve fund that would take care of even a big depression.

The whole thing has been a smart piece of government. It has given the Little Man the same access to the big-time money market that a big corporation has. It has put him into a profitable business; he becomes his own landlord. It has put private money and private brains to work in a field which public money and official procedure might have had to enter. It has made the Little Man a big customer.

IT MAY have been smart. But was it wise? Was it good? Americans, too, have wondered. To enjoy a thing before you have paid for it goes very much against the New England tradition which has greatly influenced most Americans; it's almost like eating one's dessert first. And a mortgage, especially, has always been considered an evil thing. In old-fashioned theater on the showboats, the family was always just about to lose its homestead through foreclosure. And here comes the government and helps millions to put their heads into the noose. A mortgage is also expensive. By the time you've paid back a $10,000 mortgage in monthly installments over a period of thirty years, you've paid an additional $8,228 in interest. Is it worth all that?

But in the economics of the human being, fact number one is that you live only once. The living creature, says Henri Bergson, is an arrow pointed through time. Two things may be mathematically the same, but if they come at different times of your life they're not the same. Should a mother have a washing machine now, while her children are in diapers, even though it means installment buying, or should she save for ten years and then pay cash? Should a young couple go into debt and have a house right now, or should they live five years with parents-in-law and save toward a house?

Americans decided this question over the automobile, back when a car was a toy for the rich. The Little Man, too, wanted a car, but he had to borrow money to pay for it. To the bankers of that time this made no sense: An automobile was no proper security for a loan. The man was bound to smash it up. To let a poor man ride around in the style of the rich was not the sort of thing for which bankers like to lend. They want the purpose of the loan to be productive. And a poor man who wanted to borrow for a car was not the sort of person bankers like. They set great store on the borrower's character. By such arguments—all of them quite sound—banks argued themselves out of a line of business which to this day they have not fully recaptured.

Special Finance Companies were set up to help people buy cars, and it was they who made the great discovery that people do pay their debts. Most cars are not smashed up. If somebody doesn't pay up, and you have to take his car back, it is not worthless but readily salable at standard prices. A car loan, far from being risky, turned out to be exceptionally safe.

ALL THIS doesn't need to be spelled out in America. It is part of the boyhood memories of every congressman, senator, banker, editor, preacher, labor leader. It does not need to be spelled out. But the point is—all this has made the popular mortgage much less terrifying to the public than it would otherwise be.

They also know how productive the "financing" of people's cars was in the wider sense, how it energized the whole American Economy. It spread car ownership, created better cars and better roads also for the rich man. It created millions of jobs. It changed the very nature of the car. The popular car revolutionized all living arrangements, raised land value, broke down rural isolation, washed out class distinctions. It proved things. It added enormously to the power and dignity of the ordinary man. And it crystallized an American economic idea of great power and originality: The Little Man is not so little. He's the biggest customer we've got! He's us.

All this is part of the country's living experience. And now this experience is repeated with houses.

It has already been a huge success. The Little Man's performance in paying his debts has been excellent. Foreclosures have been few, and owing to marriage trouble more than money trouble. People are paying way ahead of schedule. Mortgages that had 20 and 30 years to run are being paid off in eleven years, average! By the mil-ions people have got their homes free and clear. Millions more are getting out of the danger zone.

The civic virtues flourish. Millions of people for the first time pay local taxes, look into local government and take a hand in it—the schools, the public playgrounds, the hospitals, the library, the corruption or otherwise of local officials. They feel they are here to stay and they want things right.

doors. It is one reason the house looks more expensive than it is.

Two overhead doors, paneled with a plastic paper, make this possible. (In a colder climate, these doors would have to be more resistant to the passage of cold, as are most overhead garage doors up North.) It can be swung up or down easily on pivots.

Similar sliding screen partitions open up or close off the kitchen from the tree room or the living room. A particularly lovely pair of folding screens, on each side of the replace wall, performs the same function for the bedroom and its relation to the living room.

Persianas or louvered doors, which can be partly or entirely opened, give the house air and space as if one were sitting out of doors under a tree. The combination of Persianas, overhead doors and sliding screens offers a flexibility that turns the house from one that is snugly sheltered to one that can be completely and widely opened, which is perfect for the humid, hot weather of this climate.

The rattan and rawhide furniture, which occurs throughout, nicely adapts itself to a house that is often open to the outdoors and occasionally closed to it as well.

The Marko house, as the plan on page 225 indicates, has two bedrooms, each with its own bathroom and each independent of the other. Note that the second bedroom, besides having its own bath, has a separate entrance from outside. This makes it a very usable guest room or, if the need were to arise, a source of income as a rented room, separate from the rest of the house. In other words, the Markos have a good retirement house for their old age, when neither will want to work as hard or as long.

by builders who are always willing to show their wares. Stop at the builder's office and ask to see a model house, usually fully furnished to give you a feeling of how it will be when lived in.

It is in these communities that you will have the chance to form your own judgments of the physical and spiritual effects of America's much criticized "materialism." the machine-made fruits of technology which all the world thinks of as "typically American."

HERE IS the home of the machine that eats up garbage, the dishwasher, a heating system that adjusts itself to the weather, the stove that turns itself on or off, freeing its mistress to read a book, to go to an art class or to attend a Parent-Teacher meeting. Here is the power lawn mower, the buried automatic lawn sprinkler, the freezer, the machine that washes, rinses and dries laundry at a flick of a switch.

Here is where you can "see" a woman entertain her friends, while she's preparing dinner, in a kitchen almost pretty enough to be a drawing room, with its no-stoop ovens, electric-powered rotisserie, its stain-proof sink and work surfaces, its fan that carries off the heat and odor of cooking. This is the cradle of "casual" living, of barbecue parties in the open air, where the master of the house insists on helping with the work.

Here is the living demonstration of our new gardens that shatter all tradition, because they are designed to be as useful as they are esthetic, planned to need hardly any maintenance. Here are outdoor terraces and patios, as liveable and lived in as inside rooms. Here is the all-essential motor court which looks like part of the garden itself, but is really a driveway and parking space.

And, of course, there is always the two-car garage, for distances out here are great and life is predicated upon the workhorse motor on wheels, which turns miles into minutes. The two-car garage was considered a necessity for even a low-cost house before the last war. Our whole mid-century way of life depends on the automobile: to carry Father to work, Mother to market, children to school, dancing class or birthday parties of "close" friends, who often live miles away.

You will be seeing here the most spectacular demonstration of the power of the machine to change the living milieu, the landscape and the mores of a country. The automobile is the clue to this great spreading-out from the old urban centers. What is important to note is that at long last, after sixty years, the real social significance of the automobile is making itself felt. It is actually creating—especially noticeable during the past ten years—a new kind of American city: a decentralized, horizontal, spread-out garden community where everybody lives in separate houses on land at least 60 feet by 100 feet in size. Of course, plenty of people still live in the tight, stacked "flats" of apartment buildings—but this is not the main trend.

Who might have foreseen in 1895, when there were four private passenger cars registered in this country, that by 1955 there would be 50,594,000, an average of one car for every 3.3 persons? To say nothing of the 10,380,000 buses and trucks on our roads! Well, it has happened, and to Americans nothing is more logical than that these machines should carry them out to a pleasanter way of life.

IT DOESN'T matter which city you choose to depart from; this decentralization is occurring everywhere from coast to coast. And within car-hopping distance of the new houses, there are built schools and churches and that most peculiarly American of modern American institutions, the suburban shopping center.

This latter is a concentration of shops, sometimes all under one roof, where you can buy every conceivable necessity from pins to furniture, from a nightgown to a pound of butter. The great fashion and department stores of the big city, following their customers out of the city (these centers serve many thousands of people), are increasingly represented here, offering the same merchandise as in their downtown city stores. And always, always, the shopping center is designed on the assumption that the customer will drive up in a car to do the shopping and presumably will carry off any purchases in the same conveyance. Service counter and driveways are planned to make this motorized customer's shopping easy. Even banks are designed so the customer does not have to get out of his car!

To give you some idea of how tremendous some of these shopping centers are, some shopping center provide parking space for 10,000 cars.

As you see these new suburbs grow and spread, moving out even farther, they meet other communities that are spreading out like them, until a 1000 square miles of land may be covered with homes and their gardens. To get the magnitude of this horizontal broadcast of homes, you must look down at night from a high place, or from an airplane, and see the lights, like a vast spill of stars on the dark earth, great islands of light joined by the bright glittering streamers of miles and miles of highways—which make it all possible.

I don't mean for a moment to imply that we have achieved Utopia here, or that the rest of the world lies in abysmal, inhumane darkness, because that of course is not true. We have our share of ugliness and stupidity and drabness. But if you look closely at how our people live, you'll see we have succeeded, at least, in making a decent life available for a great many people.

Americans, curiously enough, don't brag about this rendezvous with the machine age. We just take it for granted. Oh, we may speak proudly of the comfort of our cars and automatic washers and our air conditioning. But not many have yet caught on to its over-all significance—to the fact that the promise of the machine is being realized here faster than anywhere in the world.

You'll find lots of Americans who haven't even heard of decentralization, or the effects of shopping centers, for that matter. Such broad changes require a lot of traveling to discover. And, like most human beings, we tend to concentrate on what's happening to us personally in our own little communities, without looking up to see what's happening nationwide.

This letter has probably astonished you, because I imagine you were expecting me to reel off an itinerary of typical sight-seeing places—like Niagara Falls and Washington, D. C. But for "sights," in the usual travel sense, the U.S.A. can't hold a candle to Europe and the Orient. We are not old enough, as a country, to have the ancient structures, the romantic ruins, the quaint crooked old streets. It's the 20th Century rolling in high gear that you can see here.

I know you are going to ask me to take you up to the top of the Empire State Building. I will! But you must see San Francisco and Los Angeles, too. Nobody can say he has seen America till he has seen the West Coast, for it is more essentially American than any other part of the country. (Here, I agree with one of our finest historians, James Bryce, when he wrote, "The West may be called the most distinctly American part of America, because the points in which it differs from the East are the points in which America as a whole differs from Europe.")

And you must try to see at least one of our National Parks, where the most magnificent and grandest manifestations of nature have been preserved by the government for the use and pleasure of our people. And do we use them! An average of 9,000,000 go to these thrilling wild preserves every year. Other countries have grand scenery, but it is so hard to get to see much of it. We've made it easy. You'll see! So put Yosemite and the Grand Canyon, at least, on your list.

I hope you'll keep your eye and mind and heart open to the broad meaning of America, instead of the usual tourist's kaleidoscopic impression of bits and pieces. This will be hard. For no one place, no one thing, is America. America is really a future-directed viewpoint. We are always in a state of becoming and we never finally arrive. I think you'll agree when you've seen us.

Till I meet you at Idlewild—
Affectionately yours,

Marion Cough

WHAT'S AMERICAN ABOUT AMERICAN COOKING?

We like our hot foods hot. Food warmer solves this problem for late-comers and second helpings. work out of haute cuisine. Grating, grinding, chopping, making a purée—all the hard chores, which once took so many hours, now are done in a matter of seconds. Mayonnaise, hollandaise and all their elegant relations are made without effort. What is even more important in a land where almost all cooks are self-taught amateurs, the chances of success are amazingly high.

Americans have been accused of worshipping success. Foolproof success is certainly the key to the tremendous sales of many of our kitchen appliances. Our ranges, for instance, light at a touch, are clean, quick, sootless and smokeless. But their greatest attraction is built-in success.

The modern oven maintains an even temperature, never gets too hot or too cold, doesn't burn your cake at the bottom and leave the top pale or cook one side and not the other. It is insulated, so it doesn't heat up the kitchen.

No wonder American women are beginning to bake again—from scratch, as well as with our many foolproof packaged mixes.

Comes the Thermostatic Control

Still another kind of built-in success appeared in the last three years. Now the burners on top of the stove (as well as griddles, frying pans, deep-fat fryers and casseroles) are being equipped with thermostatic controls which hold the heat exactly right, without fluctuation, for the cooking job to be done. Away with the double boiler and the bain marie. Exit pot-watching and constant stirring.

Even though a recipe says simmer six to eight hours, there is no cause for stove-watching. Already the thermostat-controlled burner is bringing the ragout, the stew, the choucroute, as well as the New England boiled dinner, into renewed popularity.

As a result, so many dishes that were "too much trouble" are again being attempted, because the "extra trouble" has been eliminated. A couple of years ago the thermostat-controlled deep fat fryer was the fastest selling electric appliance in the United States. At the same time the quality of fried food attained a new high. No longer soggy or greasy, no longer indigestible. Donuts, crullers, half-moon pies, fritto misto and Japanese tempura can be achieved by the untutored ignorant amateur. All you do is set the dial on the right mark, and you cannot fail. Here again precise mechanized control makes up for lack of knowledge or years of experience.

Famous New York restaurant is now packaging and freezing certain food specialties in individual portions. Each member of the family can thus enjoy his favorite dish from Luchow's which can be heated in its own pliofilm bag with not a pan to wash.

With the advent of the electric skillet, American ham and eggs are being prepared with a perfection that would impress the most accomplished chef in France. Bacon cooked at controlled low temperatures lies crisp but uncurled upon the breakfast plate, every inch of it superbly done. Thanks to the very prevalent toaster, coffee maker, juicer and waffle iron, American home breakfasts are unmatched anywhere in the world.

It is the glory of 20th-century America that so much of the finest is also the quickest and the easiest to serve. Which leads to: the bowl and the mixing spoon, taking the pan out of the cupboard and greasing it.

WHAT'S AMERICAN ABOUT AMERICAN COOKING?

For instance, the latest cornbread mix by Quaker Oats includes in the package a pan of aluminum foil, exactly the right size, so treated that it needs no greasing. Wonder of wonders (even to the pampered American cook), the mix comes in its own pliofilm bag into which an egg is broken and half a cup of milk is poured, then the bag is twisted shut and the mixture kneaded with the fingers for 40 seconds and squeezed into the pan.

This pan in a great number of American homes will go into an oven which is thermostatically set to maintain the right temperature and is also time-clocked to ring a bell or else even to turn itself off when fifteen minutes have elapsed.

That's not all of it. The foil pan has corners that can easily be torn or cut so that the cornbread stands free, ready to be cut into perfect squares with never a nick off an edge. No baking pan to wash. It's thrown away. Another pan comes with the next package!

Then there are our pies, and particularly our pie crust. It is not a puff paste, though it is related to it. Not the short crust of England. Not the sweetened egg yolk galette of France. Not strudel, though sometimes at best it comes close to it.

Among our many ways of cooking meats, the rotisserie ranks high in favor. Meats cooked in "free" air on a smooth-turning electrically operated spit (as with Roto-Broil shown here), retain more of their juices and have better flavor than if cooked in oven.

In addition to its essential difference in taste and texture, it becomes all the more amazing to the stranger because of the way it comes into the kitchen as a mix prepared with ingredients that make it almost impossible to make a crust which is not light, tender, flaky and delicate. For this type of mix special flours have been developed which are high in gluten and special shortenings. The chemistry and technical know-how that goes into our most modern mixes are as impressive as nuclear physics.

You would think our mixes were enough of a marvel so we would not need anything else for the fresh-baked, homemade taste. But we have still another category of valuable assets in the breadstuffs line. Namely:

The Brown 'n Serve Varieties

If there should arrive in America today an anthropologist from across the world, he would certainly make copious notes on a strange innovation in grocery stores, popularly known as "Brown 'n Serve." This is a trade name, he would note, but now a generally used term applied to a wide variety of breads, brötchen and biscuits, which appear in packages well shaped and risen but with an underdone pallor. These remain fresh for a week or ten days without refrigeration, keep indefinitely in the freezer, are intended to be heated and browned quickly in the oven (for 10 or 15 minutes) so that they appear on the table emitting the characteristic warm fresh-baked aroma as well as the delicious taste of fresh breadstuffs.

The "Brown 'n Serve" process itself is a part of the American way of doing things. It is said to have been discovered by accident by a couple of G.I.'s who after returning from World War II set themselves up as bakers in a small town in Florida where they were also members of the volunteer fire department. Once when their breads were in the oven a fire broke out, and they removed the not-quite-done loaves before they dashed away on the fire engines. When they returned some hours later, instead of throwing the bread away, they decided to put it back in the oven from whence it emerged gilded, fragrant, delicious, none the worse for waiting. They really had something.

Over a period of years this process was perfected and the patent made available through some of the more important flour companies to the baking industry—one of those good-will gestures which might have seemed incomprehensibly altruistic to the business men of another generation or other countries.

Various sections of the country have their own "Brown 'n Serve" specialties. On the West Coast there are half a dozen different types of sour-dough rolls and breads. In Louisiana there are crusty loaves known as "poor boys" for the making of the long sandwiches of the same name—sandwiches which in other areas are called heroes, or submarines.

In one market in the city of Minneapolis, Minnesota, we noted sixteen different "Brown 'n Serve" products: tea biscuits, both large and small, clover-leaf rolls, hard or club rolls, split rolls, cinnamon twirls, sesame seeded hard rolls, Vienna twisted loaves, salt sticks, party rolls, French rolls, butter fluffs, cinnamon rolls, orange rolls and Parker House buns.

Our Heat-less Concentrates

One of the emperors of Ancient Rome is said to have had prepared for a banquet a single cupful of fumet for which 500 fish were cooked, then thrown away. Distillates and concentrates are not new, but never before in history have they been made without heat.

A few years ago a method was discovered by which juices, and particularly citrus juices, could be reduced in water content—not by boiling away but by compressing under vacuum. As a result, the juice of a dozen oranges, tree ripened and fresh picked, can now be enclosed within a four- or six-ounce tin.

Quick-frozen fruit juice concentrates, lemonade, and limeade have become one of the biggest sellers in the field of frozen foods. And because of the tastiness of these frozen concentrates plus our year-round supply of fresh fruit, plus our electric juicers, we Americans amaze the rest of the world by our consumption of orange juice. More and more we drink it in tall tumblers, six or eight oranges going into the average portion.

Our Instant

Old familiar foods are strangely transformed in America. Even oatmeal, which in Europe is cooked overnight, has become in the supermarket world a three minute job. Then there is an instant oatmeal (Please turn the page)

REQUIRES NO MOWING—MAKES WORLD'S MOST BEAUTIFUL "LAWN"

Our Blue-Green Mondo "Grass" is lily turf, described by the U. S. Department of Agriculture as Ophiopogon Japonicus, (formerly called Mondo Japonicus); native to Northern China, drought tolerance, evergreen, technically a "ground cover." It is a relative of the lily, with paper-thin blades, 1/8" wide. This sod-forming EVERGREEN low-growing oriental genus is currently used by many owners of distinctive homes in America as "lawn grass." Now we can offer Blue-Green Mondo "Grass" at popular prices. IT IS SO HARDY IT CAN BE PLANTED ANYTIME. Will stand traffic, but is slightly heavy to walk on. Blue-Green Mondo "Grass" retains its color the year 'round. Thrives in shade or sun. Extremely hardy, rarely requires watering. Fantastically beautiful, drooping low to the ground in weeping style year after year. REQUIRES NO MOWING AND SHOULD NEVER BE MOWED. Guaranteed to withstand severe degree of freezing or money refunded. Ideal for heavy shaded areas, dry or wet. Free folder of testimonials and photos of Mondo "lawns" sent on request; Mondo is resistant to diseases; insects and animals will not feed on it. Stops erosion, grows compactly, crowding out grass and weeds. Multiplies rapidly, approximately 100 times (10,000%), first year. New sprigs sprout from roots. Enhances property value. For good coverage first year, plant 4" to 12" apart. Transplant newly sprouted sprigs immediately. Numerous rooted blades to plug. Planting and culture instructions with each order. Remittance with order. Shipped prepaid. Money-back guarantee—if not completely delighted, you may return at once for refund. Shipped now or when desired. Agents wanted everywhere.

AMERICAN COOKING

which one makes in the bowl by merely adding hot water. This has taste and texture. The supermarket wonderland is full of these "instants," many of which need no cooking whatsoever: instant coffee, instant chocolate, instant rice, dozens of instant puddings, instant frostings for the beautiful cakes.

Even to save washing a bowl and beater, there is an instant pudding that you shake like a cocktail. And all these marvels are to be found not in just a few supermarkets but everywhere, in large and small towns. (It is not unusual for a middle-size town to have a supermarket with 5,000 different items.)

All these short-cuts and labor-savers tend to confuse the central truth. For instance, there are those who charge that our industrialized foods are a gargantuan monument to the laziness of American women.

The opposite is probably closer to the truth. Our supermarkets with their myriad convenience foods appear to be the symbols, as well as the outgrowth, of crowded lives. The women who buy them are not lazy or pampered, but as busy as women have ever been. At an earlier age, they are having larger families, more outside jobs, wider interests, less and less domestic help. Nevertheless, they have a yearning not for less but for more creative cooking. They want an opportunity to practice the art without the drudgery.

Unlike the Parisian, who rarely bakes, unlike the delicatessen devotees of old Berlin and Vienna, Americans seem to prefer to buy their foods not completely done. They prefer them to be 50, 60, 80 or even 98 but not 100 per cent ready-to-eat. Fifteen years ago the makers of a famous canned tomato soup were startled to discover that more than three-quarters of their soup was being served not as soup, but as the beginning of sauces or the seasoning for casseroles and meat loaves.

The customers run away with the product and convert it to their own uses. They mix, they add, they season, they create with it.

Then there is the big factor—vitally significant in the history of man—that Americans are eating more foods and better foods. In 1955 Americans spent $69,393,589,000 for food—nearly 70 billion dollars. This is nearly a 300 per cent increase over 1942.

According to a story in the September 3rd issue of Food Field Reporter, a trade newspaper, a

U. S. government report shows:
"Food expenditures of house-keeping families in the United States averaged $27 a week in the spring of 1955 as compared with $10 in 1942. About $22 of the $27 was for food consumed at home, while the remaining $5 was spent for meals and between-meal food away from home. The figures include expenditures for soft drinks and alcoholic beverages, but do not include expenditures for the many non-foods that are commonly bought in grocery stores, the report said. The 1955 figures were based on responses from families which averaged 3.43 persons in size.

"The food expenditure increase since the previous nation-wide survey in 1942 reflects both higher food prices and the use of more expensive foods," the report stated. It said that while the consumer price index of the Bureau of Labor statistics advanced only 6.5 per cent between 1948 and 1955, urban families increased their food expenditures by about 25 per cent during the same period. "This indicates what is sometimes referred to as up-grading the diet—either the use of more expensive types of foods or inclusion of more services, such as pre-cooking of foods," the report noted."

So what, finally, is American cookery?

It's all the old cuisines of many nations of the world brought here by the immigrants who came from everywhere to create America. But it is greater than the sum of these parts. In this amalgamation, something new has been created. We have inherited the cooking of the whole world—and we have made of our inheritance a new, lively and astonishingly wise cuisine.

HOW OUR CARS HAVE CHANGED OUR GARDENS

These days a garden must be almost entirely manageable by the owners themselves, with perhaps only outside help for work such as spraying, pruning, root-feeding, which may be had from firms specializing in this sort of work. This leaves lawn care and flower growing for the owners to do themselves.

Also, our requirement for low maintenance has had a tremendous design effect on landscape architecture. Modern gardens try to eliminate hand labor of trimming, edging, etc. Fussy perennial borders requiring much transplanting and staking are becoming a thing of the past. We rely for our flowers on the trouble-free types: blooming shrubs and trees, bulb and tuber flowers like peonies, daffodils and lilies, vines that bloom and need little pruning. Pot gardening is growing by leaps and bounds. It lets us carry our flowers to the point of perfection behind service-yard walls before we wheel them in carts and barrows to a strategic point on the terrace, to brighten our parties and private hours.

We have also begun to use cantilevered decks, as a way to get out into nature without altering nature or having to manicure her. A deck can skim out over an unmowed meadow without resting on it, and so seem not to set up any maintenance requirement. They can coexist without making requirements of each other. (Two examples of such decks are pictured with this story.)

Another tremendous influence on garden design has been the increase of glass in our houses. As our interiors have become more open, our gardens become more prominent from within our houses. So more and more of our gardens are being designed to count from interior vantage points. In fact, frequently the garden seems to merge visually with the house. This is accomplished by a number of design devices: interior floors of tile or stone continuing through floor-to-ceiling glass on to the outdoors to become garden paving; walls and ceilings seemingly penetrating the glass wall to reappear outdoors; indoor planting beds next to walls of glass using the same plants as appear outdoors in comparable beds.

In short, more of us are using our gardens as extensions of our rooms, making our rooms bigger, more spacious and interesting. In the best residential building since the war, the designing literally starts at the property line and every bit of land is made to become part of the house design. This is quite a reversal of the old days, when the garden was a place to walk in—away from and often out of sight of the house.

Because we are integrating the garden and the house more than they have ever before been integrated, we are also beginning to use the structures of the garden for climate control, to soften the edges of undesirable weather and to lengthen the periods of livable outdoor weather. This is done with windbreaks, sunpockets, shade-makers of all kinds, baffles to direct breezes where we want them, sunken gardens to create a nighttime pool of cool air, and so on.

In fact, our best gardens, developed during the last 15 or 20 years, are as different from past ones as our modern kitchens are different from their not-too-recent predecessors. When we change our attitudes, about how we want something to serve us, we seem to become our most creative. Solving problems of human need produces—for Americans at least—the best atmosphere for becoming esthetically effective. The finest landscape architecture of our times is eloquent proof.

A practical guide for giving (OR GETTING!)

For the teen-ager. Fill her stocking full of frivolous things, if you will—but don't, by any means, underestimate the practical side of her nature. Idea! Contribute a teaspoon in Gorham sterling to her hope chest—they're priced from $3.75*. If she hasn't selected her Gorham pattern yet, why not hint that she do so? When you give her Gorham you know she can match and add to her pattern—even years later.

For brides-to-be. Chances are she's crossed her fingers hoping to get a complete set of silver. She's probably chosen a Gorham pattern, since there are more to choose from in Gorham than any other make. So, just consult the bridal registry at your Gorham jewelry or department store to find out the pieces she needs. Gorham place-settings (knife, fork, spoon, salad fork, soup spoon, spreader) from $29.75*.

For the just married. Frankly, we've never heard of a couple who ever really had too much sterling silver! If theirs is a Gorham pattern, whether you give them a piece or a place-setting, you know you're giving the finest silver money can buy. They can always use an extra Gorham tablespoon, from $10.25*; or a set of 4 extra teaspoons, from $15.00*.

For families. Fill-ins and additions to the family silver service are always welcome. And for the family that has never experienced the joys of owning fine sterling, the most luxurious gift you can select is the complete Gorham service for eight (illustrated left). Take as long as a year to pay—most stores have convenient budget plans.

Psst . . . if you'd like to be on the receiving end for Gorham this Christmas—why not collaborate with your nearest Gorham retailer? He'll be happy to plot with you ways and means to be sure you get the fine sterling you dream of!

A COMPLETE Gorham service for eight, in its own attractive wood chest, is priced from $238*.

MEMO

to a MODERN EPICURE

by Poppy Cannon

"People who eat are no problem and people who cook are even less of a problem when it comes to finding gifts." This obvious but sage observation simplifies life enormously, for, as far as we have been able to discover, just about everybody eats something with some pleasure and almost as many people these days take an interest in some form of cooking.

Nobody needs to be reminded of the princely and traditional hampers of wines and fruits, spirits and cordials, fruit cakes and bags of nuts. There are other things too—many little inexpensive items sure to bring a gleam to the epicurean eye.

Edible Pebbles

Our office staff was thrown into an uproar when we discovered Swiss Candy Pebbles, actually sugar-coated bits of almond, replicas of the colorful stones of Lake Geneva, pink and brown and yellow and green, a trompe l'oeil sweet, and talk-titillant extraordinary. Most charming decoration for a dinner table, especially when served in an abalone shell whose colors reflect the soft hues of the delectable little stones. Imported from Switzerland, they are packed in New York by Cresca Company and are available in stores that carry Cresca products, hundreds of specialty shops and department stores. Gracious thought: Order at least a half dozen to keep on hand for the Dear Ones you forget!

Open Sesames

We asked a number of our favorite gourmet cooks, "What little stocking stuffer or like-to-get would you give?" Strangely enough they all suggested "openers" of one kind or another:

A Lid Flipper by Ekco that lifts off tops as easily as drawing a breath. With a Lid Flipper all tumblers open, all pry caps whisk off. Costs about 15¢.

A vacuum can opener—please. I am one of those who can never turn the key around a coffee can without getting off the track. But now there is a little do-hicky, Can-Mate, made by Slip-Seal Company, Long Beach 13, California. Costs about 25¢, deals quickly, safely, easily with tins of coffee, shortening, meats, all sorts of vacuum cans. Hallelujah!

A screw top jar and bottle opener. Big jars, little jars, all kinds of bottles, ketchup, vinegar, oil, herbs, peanut butter, anything, everything, with a screw top lid, opens without being held under hot water, without any struggle with a Top-Off (Please turn to page 20)

to Treasure

Fascinating conversation pieces for your rooms, yet so much more than that. For all their charm and individuality, Schatz clocks are marvels of efficiency.

Four-ball pendulums, rotating in complete silence, measure time with a degree of accuracy never before attained in clocks of this type. And the gay cuckoo clocks, deeply hand-carved, tick faithfully for eight days.

Such choice timepieces, of course, make the most delightful kind of gift for Christmas, weddings, anniversaries, important birthdays. See them at better stores or at Remington Rand Shaver Headquarters in 130 cities.

Your best buy in blankets

..9 leading manufacturers tell you what to look for

Blankets look so much alike these days, a yardstick of quality is needed. For when you buy a blanket, you're making a very important investment. It is wrapped up with the comfort of one-third of your life. Naturally, you want the best in comfort, beauty and long wear, so here are some pointers to keep in mind when you are shopping for blankets.

Your best guide—the test of time

One of the surest ways to get the finest blanket made is to choose the fiber that has been tested by time. And this means wool. For over 5,000 years, wool has proved to be Nature's most perfect protection against unfriendly temperatures. From the very dawn of history, man has depended upon wool for the most healthy and most comfortable type of covering.

Take a tip from kings and queens

Through the ages, the world's most famous royalty have prized the magnificence of wool. Did you know that even in Queen Isabella's day, when nobles visited a foreign court, they bore gifts of wool—Nature's golden fleece!

Enjoy the utmost in luxury

You'll find modern wool blankets are heavenly soft . . . and their beautiful, jewel-bright colors are unequalled. Magic "dye-attractors" lock the dye deep down in the very core of the fiber. That's why pure wool blankets can be cleaned again and again . . . colors remain sparkling!

You can have warmth without weight

A blanket that lets you move and turn freely is so essential to restful sleep. And that is what you get with the lightweight protection of wool. Wool fibers have a natural crimp—unduplicated by man—which creates millions of tiny insulating pockets that shut out night-time drafts. You'll sleep in featherweight warmth—and without static, too!

For a lifetime of wear

If you think about the future, you'll want blankets with the stamina of wool. Even with youngsters' rough play, your wool blankets won't get a worn, threadbare look. For wool has unique resilience that prevents matting. And wool blankets don't shed their nap the way others often do.

Washing is no problem

Wool blankets are so easy to wash, either by hand or right in your washing machine. Just follow the simple directions for temperature of water, soaking and washing time and drying. It's really remarkable how wool—the most prized of blankets—needs no pampering!

Think of your safety— and your family's too

It's so reassuring to know that a wool blanket is nonflammable . . . won't catch on fire. That's one reason why America's airlines and the U. S. Army buy blankets of fine wool.

No other fiber combines so many advantages

That's why wool is the yardstick of quality in blankets. For the best in luxury, comfort, and long wear—nothing measures up to wool!

Chicken for the Holiday

Not for The Big Meal, perhaps, but for the in-between festivities, quick-frozen breasts of chicken are so right. Here are three specially gala versions:

The Bird Goes Arabian

Margarite Lewis, New York's All-Nations cook, who prepares dinner menus in 32 languages, after much pleading, has parted with her recipe for chicken with sour cherry sauce.

Provide 1 chicken breast for each serving. Cover with a marinade of lemon juice, basil and sage, using about 3 or 4 tablespoons of lemon juice for each breast. To serve 4, use 1 cup lemon juice, 1 tablespoon basil (half as much if it is dried), and about 1/2 teaspoon sage. Allow chicken to thaw in the marinade and remain there for several hours, 24 if possible. Bake in a slow oven about 40 minutes, until golden brown.

Meanwhile prepare a red cherry sauce. Drain juice from 1 can of pitted sour red cherries, thicken the juice with 1 tablespoon cornstarch or arrowroot and cook until clear. Add the juice of a lemon, 1/2 cup of honey, and 1/4 teaspoon ground ginger. Let this simmer together until thoroughly blended, add the cherries and heat. If you wish to brighten the color, add some red vegetable coloring. Serve over fluffy white rice. A spinach mushroom soufflé is an excellent accompaniment.

Fried in the Package

Swift's, in case you haven't heard, has a quick-frozen browned fried chicken. But is it really good? The answer is, "Yes, very!" It can be heated by broiling over charcoal or in the oven or in the skillet. Directions are on the package. Particularly savory when brushed with lemon-flavored butter or your favorite barbecue sauce, and then sprinkled lavishly with chopped parsley and chives.

Chicken and Artichokes Anderson

Your own or Swift's fried chicken combines delectably with Birds Eye quick-frozen artichoke hearts (yes, there are such) to make a most parisien dish. Place the fried chicken in a heavy skillet or your electric frying pan along with 2 tablespoons butter. Add 1 package of artichoke hearts, 1 level teaspoon really good poultry seasoning (like Anderson Farms, for instance), 1/2 cup dry sherry, 1 can condensed cream of chicken soup, 2/3 cup top milk or light cream. Cover and bring to a boil gradually. Simmer very slowly for about 15 minutes. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve. Serves 4.

Cinnamon "Sweets"

To go along with ham, pork, or poultry instead of the usual glazed or candied sweet potatoes, you might try Dorann's newest achievement, quick-frozen sweet potato puffs. Place the frozen puffs on a very well-buttered dish, preferably one that can go to the table. Brush with melted butter and sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon. Be liberal. A grating of lemon or orange rind adds an interesting touch, too. If you don't feel like grating your own, House of Herbs does it for you. Heat puffs in the oven or under the broiler according to package directions.

No-Problem Cooky

Pillsbury has brought to market a new kind of brown and serve specialty, slice-and-bake icebox cookies—coconut, peanut, butterscotch. These offer infinite possibilities aside from the obvious. You can, for instance, achieve tart shells and galettes in the true French manner, for the galette paste is nothing more or less than a cooky dough. Simply form the long rolls into balls and roll as if you had done the mixing yourself. All sorts of shapely cookies can be made from this dough, too. Roll out on a marble slab or well-floured pastry board and cut to suit your fancy—or allow the dough to soften just enough to become malleable and put through a cooky press.

Musical Fruits of the Mozart Year

By RICHARD WILLIAMS

Well, it's all over. The Mozart mammoth rally has disbanded. The commemorative celebration has ended and the birthday candles have been packed away. Looking back, we may observe—gladly or ruefully—that Wolfgang Amadeus received in 1956 more publicity, more fame, more encomiums, than in any year of his career, living or posthumous.

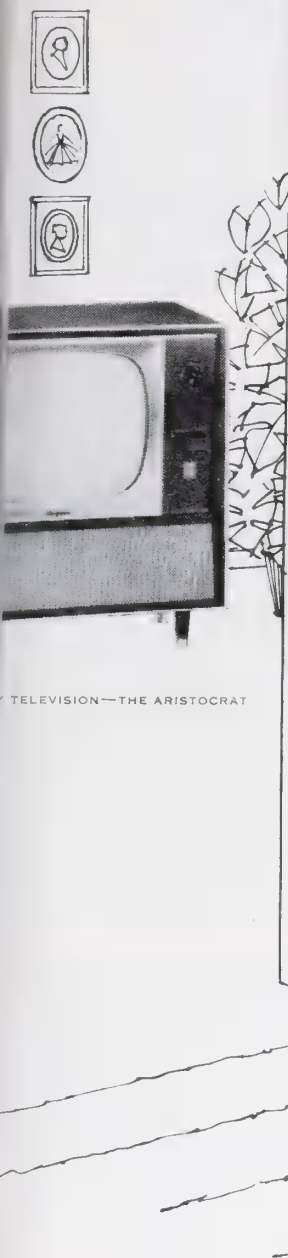

The occasion, which, as everybody interested in music knows, was the 200th anniversary of the composer's birth, gave us the opportunity to organize on a big scale, to cry in a world-wide chorus, "What a genius!" and "How wonderful!" Mozart was news. He became the Prince Rainier of the musical world. All during the year there could be heard a loud and furious beating of the public drum, an instrument used sparingly by the composer himself.

There was no musical festival in 1956, no orchestra from Amsterdam to Zanzibar and no operatic signe, however modest, that did not attempt performances of Mozart works. Many of these performances were good, many of them were bad. Mozart is not an easy composer to perform. You cannot "fake" him as you can Stravinsky or Berlioz. Mozart's power lies not in mass noise nor in thunderstorm tragedy. His greatness cannot be measured by decibels. He is not a hi-fi boom. (Please turn to page 26)

All must be clean in a Mozartean performance—clean, precise and yet fluid. His scores must be perceived with an eye sensitive and quick; they must be heard with an ear which can listen to the meaning beneath the surface. The alternation of sun and cloud, of light now brilliantly bright, now veiled by sadness, which occurs in Mozart's music must be caught without sacrificing the accurate delineation of his design.

Any musician will tell you that Mozart is difficult, because he seems so easy. It is true of any composer, but it is especially true of Mozart that he requires a certain style for performance, a style to which only a wise and aristocratic musician can do justice. So the poor performances outnumbered the good ones (they always do). That perhaps isn't important. The total effect of hearing Mozart, even when you make allowances, is to increase your admiration for him.

The question of excellence becomes more important when we deal with recordings—performances meant to serve us for years to come and to prolong the Mozart year into a Mozart lifetime. The recording companies, those modern popularizers of music, threw everything they had into the Mozart year. So many recordings were released that they figuratively and literally came out of our ears. Even at that, the project initially announced by the Philips Company of Holland—recording every single note that Mozart ever wrote—was not carried to completion.

Listening to even a part of this mass of Mozart, which includes the lesser works in two or three versions, makes one conscious of two facts: First, that there are lesser works; that Mozart did produce "occasional" music on which he lavished insufficient care, having no doubt, not the slightest conception that they would be taken as a gospel more than a century after his death. In a word, all of Mozart's music is not good and there is little reason why anybody but a specialist would want to listen to even a note he penned. Much better to concentrate on the good, the great, the beautiful, of which there is no more beautiful example.

The second fact which emerges is that a new recording is not necessarily a better recording, simply because it is new. It may be technically better, its sound being more modern, fuller and richer. But the older recording may still give you greater satisfaction, because of an artist's communication, because of the mood of the performance.

To be sure, many fine new recordings were released in 1956. Yet none of the three new performances of The Magic Flute can compete with the old version which Sir Thomas Beecham conducted, nor do the four new versions of The Marriage of Figaro quite supplant the superb original Fritz Busch performance at Glyndebourne. The finest performance of the G-Minor Symphony No. 40 is still to be heard on the slightly dated sound of Bruno Walter and the New York Philharmonic; but there are no fewer than 23 versions of that symphony in the current record catalog.

A guide to the best recordings of Mozart's major works seems therefore desirable. Here is such a guide, conscientiously compiled of something old, something new. Its immediate purpose is to aid in the selection of gifts for your musical friends. Its larger purpose is for yourself—to inaugurate many hours of listening joy, regardless of anniversaries, milestones or publicity flooded commemorations.

"My Niagara Cyclo-Massage® Chair is wonderful . . . relieves tension and fatigue in no time at all"

JOHN S. HEWITT

JOHN S. HEWITT
President
Anahist Co.

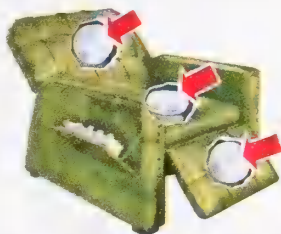

"There's nothing quite like a leisurely 'ride' in one of the new Niagara Chairs. In the middle of the day, I like to lean back in mine and let the cyclo-massage motors relax tired muscles and nerves. The Niagara Chair is a wonderful aid to comfort and health . . . and it would, I think, be a delight to any busy executive."

Now you can help increase circulation, ease tension, and improve physical condition—easily, comfortably—while you read or rest.

The Niagara Lounge Chair is a beautiful reclining chair of simple, conservative lines that contains three Niagara Cyclo-Massage motors. Exhaustive research engineering has made possible this amazing equipment, and medical research confirms its remarkable muscle relaxant and sedative effects.

If you want the sensation of a lifetime, just sit in the Niagara chair. Ease back to your most comfortable position, turn on the motors, and . . . aaaahhhh . . . that's it. Cares and wears of mind and body float away. You are but half-conscious of a marvelous action, like thousands of tiny fingers gently stroking, kneading, reaching deep, DEEP down to manipulate and comfort every muscle and joint in your body.

You owe it to yourself to try the Niagara Chair or, at least, to get complete details on it. Send coupon for complete details including beautiful, full-color brochure.

Buried in the deep, foam-rubber cushions are three cyclo-massage motors . . . not common vibrators but duplicates of the motors used in Niagara Massage equipment built for hospitals, clinics, and athletic teams.

Niagara Massage is available in many models to suit every need and condition, including the comfortable EXECUTIVE CUSHION for use on desk chair, and the THERMO-CYCLOPAD, right, combining heat and massage to help relieve pain of chronic arthritis, bursitis, fibrositis and rheumatism. Send for complete details.

"MY WIFE IS A GENIUS!"

LOOK AT THE WONDERFUL THINGS SHE DOES WITH HER

Compliments come from the unlikeliest sources—husbands and kids and even in-laws—when you have a General Slicer in your kitchen.

Whatever the food—a General gives you perfect slices everytime—appetite-appealing slices that look so good they just plead to be eaten. And when you taste them . . . mmm! Until you've experienced freshly sliced foods, you just don't know how enjoyable eating can be.

For breakfast—slice fruits, oranges, bread, bacon and ham—crispy thin or farm-style thick. For lunch—slice sandwich bread, cheese, tomatoes, cucumbers, vegetables, coldcuts. For dinner—slice roasts, French-fried potatoes, ham butts, even pineapple for desserts.

A General slicer saves money, too, because you can buy bulk foods—loaf cheeses and sides of bacon, for instance—and slice them yourself. Perfect for portioning frozen foods. Available at better stores everywhere.

Jordan's GENUINE VIRGINIA HAM

Nearly 300 years ago, Virginia colonists sent to England hams of a distinctive savory flavor that soon were acclaimed by gourmet and royalty throughout the capitals of Europe. Both the fame and famous flavor have endured. Today, as then, the true Virginia ham is one of the world's delicacies.

Each magnificent ham now hanging in our aging rooms, slowly cured, smoked to a rich mahogany hue, aged approx. one year, has been tended by hand through each unhurried step—as we have done for the past 116 years. These carefully selected hams are put down in dry salt in cool cellars for 25 to 45 days, and turned often. The salt is removed and the ham allowed to mature for three weeks. Next it is rubbed by hand with a thick coat of black pepper. Then it goes into the smokehouse to hang for 30 days and nights over hand tended fires, until the juices drip and the dense, pungent hickory smoke permeates and flavors the meat. Then to darkened aging rooms, to hang for months.

And finally, just before shipment, each ham (in a 40-hour process) is soaked, simmered, the skin removed, the fat trimmed, then glazed with sugar and baked with wine to a savory feast of firm, sweet and tender meat.

Your Jordan's ham arrives ready to be enjoyed, needs no heating. It keeps for weeks and weeks. Traditional for Christmas dinner... perfect for cocktail party or buffet.

Sealed in amber cellophane, nestled in burgundy tissue in Old Virginia Smokehouse box (carving, serving and keeping suggestions enclosed), here is a magnificent gift for those you especially wish to please this year, and a grand treat for your family.

Our hams are prepared to please discerning people, and we guarantee complete satisfaction. Weight 8 to 13 lbs. cooked; $1.89 per lb. (net cooked wt.) shipped anywhere in continental U.S. Please specify whether wanted now; for Christmas; or other date.

FOR YOUR RECORD LIBRARY

A superb gift for yourself or for serious record-collecting friend would be the presentation of the monumental Archive Series produced in Germany and distributed in America through Decca records. So far it has reached a total of twenty-nine twelve-inch LP's, ranging over eight centuries of music. It is really a music library in itself. The most recent release includes a touchingly beautiful memorial service on the anniversary of Mozart's death, recorded in St. Stephen's Cathedral of Vienna. Contained in the service is Mozart's own Requiem, his last great work. In addition to these two records, there are three discs of Bach's St. John Passion.

The thoroughness, the authenticity and scholarship, the physical production and engineering techniques involved in the Archive Series are of the highest caliber. Fortunately, individual records of this huge undertaking may be purchased separately.

the life of your carpets

A century of stern craftsmanship has highlighted the fact that a carpet cushion can be either too firm to protect against the abrasion of footsteps, or too soft and spongy to absorb the impact of sharp heels.

The perfection of genuine Ozite is achieved through millions of interlocking hair fibers, scientifically measured to insure proper cushioning for your carpets.

Ozite readily absorbs impact, retains its resiliency under the heaviest traffic and remains springy for life.

For almost a century the makers of OZITE have been developing a master's skill in the selection and blending of the finest cattle hair, creating an excellence in quality which has made Genuine OZITE the standard by which all other carpet cushions are judged.

Chicly coiffed fruit vendor meets ship at St. Lucia.

There is a West Indian proverb that says, "If crab no walk, he no see nutting." You can interpret this pungent bit any way you've a mind to, but we consider it one of the soundest truisms for travelers that was ever uttered. Because, no matter where you go, it's surprising how much you can miss of the understanding and enjoyment of a place, simply by not getting out and poking around for yourself. By a coincidence, this saw seems to apply particularly to American cruisers to the smaller, less familiar islands of the Caribbean, where cruise ships put in for a few hours, which time the tourists are likely to kill in the local pub or bargaining for baskets. In the past, at least, it has always seemed to us that most cruisers returned from such outings with adequate suntans, some rather racy reports about the night of the captain's dinner, but nearly as ignorant of where they'd been as if they'd spent two weeks locked up on a Staten Island ferry boat. Yet this is one of the most bewitching regions in the world, a great sea of Bali H'ai-type islands, lushly tropical and usually crowned with mysteriously haze-veiled (Please turn to page 116) mountains, and full of intriguing peoples and colorful mores. Each has its own personality with a rich and romantic history that was frequently connected with our own in the early days, when the Indies were great trading centers and pirates roamed the Main. It's also an area that is changing fast, with new hotels starting to spring up everywhere and new air and ship routes constantly making it easier for travelers to visit these islands, which were formerly considered a little off beat. Now that the 10 per cent federal tax on transportation has been repealed, 50,000 cruise-ship passengers and astronomical numbers of air-borne travelers are expected to visit the Caribbean islands this winter. Some will settle down and stay for a while. Some will charter schooners and pursue their own itinerary, floating around the tropical waters, dropping anchor wherever their fancy moves them. If you're going to be one of them, we refer you to our proverb. And for your benefit, we've consulted our own memoirs and rounded up a few pertinent reports by some recently returned and friendly crabs who have walked and have seen something. ### Spice Island, B.W.I.

If you go to Grenada, they tell us, there's a superior guide and driver called Godfrey Lorainley who has the glad-hand characteristics of a Jimmie Walker, but who knows the splendid, mountainous little spice island like no one else. Scenery is what the island has most of, besides cloves, cinamon, nutmeg and sapota, a nut-like rather almond-flavored fruit, which gives a good flavor to sweet foods. ("For de cakes, milady," one of the natives explained to us.) Sometimes the natives pick the spices by the branch to sell to tourists, so you can lay in a nice fresh spice supply, right off the tree. The steep and tropical forest drive up 2,000 feet to the Grand Etang, a 13-acre lake in the crater of a defunct volcano, is really worth the effort. Grenada's big town is St. George's, one of the prettiest harbors in the Caribbean, with red-roofed houses climbing the steep mountain. For native handcrafts, usually of straw, pay a visit to the Self-Help Store (where we acquired our proverb book). Here you can also investigate the novelty of guava cheese, a sweet, sugar-gritty confection made of the guavas that grow wild around there, along with the hibiscus and bougainvillea and all the other flashy flora that's a standard backdrop wherever you go in the Caribbean.

There's good swimming, beautiful sand and water like liquid aquamarine at Grand Anse Beach, a few minutes from town. And the pretty pink and well-run little Santa Maria Hotel has a made-to-order terrace overlooking the sea, town and the lagoon-harbor. It's nice to sit here at sunset with a rum punch at hand after a day of driving, swimming and roaming through town. If you stay in Grenada for any length of time, you can be given the courtesy of guest membership in local golf and social clubs. And be sure to take a trip in a schooner to the little outlying islands called the Grenadines.

Through the Supermarket

Barbados is a sort of re-creation of England on a tropical beach and, curiously enough, its social goings-on and night life are conceded to be the giddiest in all the British West Indies. (At nightclubs, like the Club Morgan, you pay for each drink as you get it, promptly tear the chit in half, spend the evening in a pile of confetti.) Bajans, as the people here call themselves, are particularly addicted to the steel band, that omnipresent West Indian orchestra made up of resonant oil drums and garbage cans activated by exuberantly rhythmic native hands. (Cook has a recording of it.) There's a bigger and better supply of the traditionally worth-buying British goods here than in the neighboring islands—Liberty silks, china, do-skin (both that sportin' kind of chamois-color cloth and the gloves). Sam Lord's Castle, a combination hotel and museum of early plantation days, is something worth a visit. So is beautiful Crane's Beach, where there is a typically good Barbados hotel.

But, after a sunny morning on the town in Bridgetown, we're told that the most amusing way to cool your throat and indulge yourself with an excellent lunch is to drop into the Flying Fish Club. Only you don't just drop in off the street. You have to go through a supermarket, located on the main street near, believe it or not, Sober Alley. (Please turn to page 196)

Christmas Collection

With pleasure we invite you to feast your eyes and imagination on our Third Annual Edition of Christmas Decorations, brilliantly designed to give your house the magnificence this lavish season deserves

House Beautiful's Third Annual Collection of Christmas Decorations

In splendor, elegance and versatility, we believe our decorations for Christmas 1956 exceed even the collections we created for you in 1954 and 1955, although all are usable with each other. Here's a wardrobe of dramatic ornaments, from wall decoration to place mats, so integrated in color and design, so adaptable and easy to work with, you can be sure of a magnificent effect in any room.

Most important, these 29 correlated, well-scaled trimmings let you apply the same principles of good design to your Christmas frivolity as you do to your "serious" decoration. They are simple elements, created specifically so that with a minimum of fuss you can play up the architecture and furnishings of your rooms. Their dominant color is gold-gilt, its rich gleam usable everywhere. Made of foil cardboard or plastics, they fold flat or roll up for year-to-year storage. They were executed by Austen Displays, Inc. All are described on these 17 pages, with a wealth of ways in which they can bring new splendor and brilliance to the lavish old season.

Golden Baroque Filigree Flat Ornaments are firm scrollwork cutouts of cardboard, covered front and back with shining gilt foil. They are especially designed to be used on flat surfaces—to frame doorways, windows, mirrors, for instance. Composed in groups of two or four, with their straight edges joining, they create brilliant escutcheons to be placed flat against walls or doors. The pieces have concealed "slots" from which ornaments may be hung in the open-work. They come in pairs, in two sizes: 9" wide x 24" long, $1.50; 13" wide x 36" long, $3.25.

Clear Plastic Prisms, as elegantly shaped as cut-crystal chandelier drops and many-faceted to refract light, are designed to hang on the gilt ornaments or to add sparkle anywhere. They come by the dozen, in two sizes, hanging wires included. 3" long, $1.25; 6" long, $2.

Build up a mantel wall with a gleaming cartouche of two large and two small Baroque Flats, two Golden Ropes and greenery. Totals, $25.25.

Two small four-way Golden Baroque Fan-outs, one hung upside down, compose a fountain of glitter. Without balls, such radiance totals $7.

Glowing with golden highlights and crystalline shimmer, centerpiece is a Four-way Fan-out, inverted like a tree, dripping with 24 long and short prisms, and set on two pairs of large Baroque Flats. A small Fan-out, similarly prism-hung, makes a wall sconce. (Details of tableware on page 171.) Trimmings, $22.50.

Decked with six dozen Prisms, two large Fan-outs become glorious table trees. A third gleams like a chandelier. No ordinary trinkets produce such splendid splash for $27.75.

HOMES OF THE FUTURE

High-key drama is yours simply by adding our decorations to existing architecture and furnishings. Cover a window with "Stained-glass" Plastic Panels and you have a jewel-like play of light, night and day. Or glorify a plant stand with a Golden Rope.

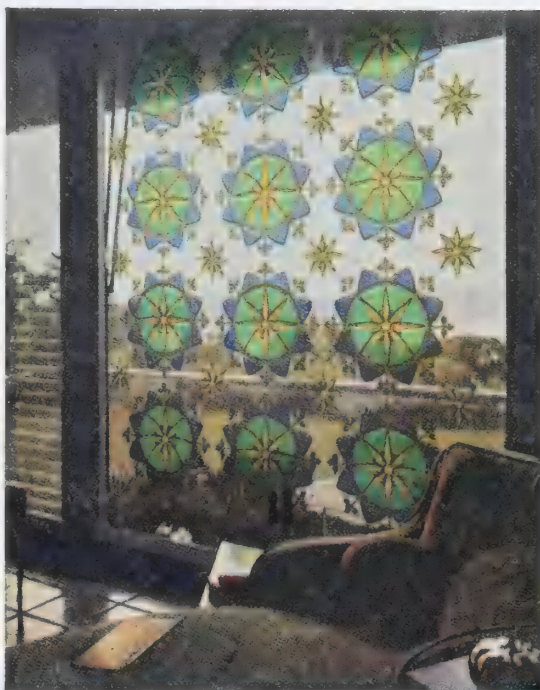

"Stained-glass" Plastic Panels are squares of clear acetate plastic patterned in a Gothic motif of sapphire blue, emerald green, topaz and gold, like the fabulous rose windows of 13th-century cathedrals. Simply applied with cellulose tape, they can transform any clear glass or light-diffusing surface into a richly glowing, jewel-like mosaic of color. Panels can be joined in a continuous pattern or motifs may be cut apart and recomposed. Four 5" squares, $2; 20" ■ 20" squares, each $3.50.

Golden Ropes are glittering two-yard lengths of twisted gold-gilt 2½" in circumference, finished at each end with a sumptuous 9" tassel. As a swag or bowknot, a single rope can be spectacular. Two-yard tasseled rope, $10. By the yard, $1.75. Tassels, each $3.25.

A series of large "Stained-glass" plastic squares creates a mosaic-like dado along a stairway and around a hall. All this Christmas grandeur stores in flat pile.

On windows, "Stained glass" panels are brilliant ornament, day and night, indoors and out. Daylight diffuses jewel color into a room. By night, inside lamplight casts a cathedral-like glow outside.

HOME OF MR. AND MRS. W. W. SIMPSON

Here and at left, see the variety of effects you can get with "Stained-glass" panels. Small stars and circular patterns were cut out of 5" squares.

A glamorous stairway is an easy matter of green festoons, lashed with Golden Rope, punctuated by Starbursts and Half-Spheres described on page 127.

PHOTOGRAPHED AT DUNBAR FURNITURE CO.

When our Spiral-Center Starbursts are hung free, they move and shimmer like mobiles, and give you the added decorative bonus of shadow play. Used flat, they pattern a surface with rays of gold light.

PHOTOGRAPHED AT CASSARD AND WALKER, INC.

This effulgent wall treatment is simplicity itself—two Golden Ropes, each swagged from a Starburst. As fasteners, use fine metal-topped pushpins.

Golden Scrolls, three magnificent hanging panels, reminiscent of kakemonos, give a wonderfully rich effect for least effort. Hang a Scroll and the whole room sings with splendor. Designed by Marion Dorn, they are silk-screen prints in rich blues and greens on cloth-backed gold-foil paper. Colors correlate with our "Stained-glass" Panels and Half-Spheres. Two are triumphal Golden Angels, one facing right, one left. The third, a romantic geometric called Golden Star Mosaic, composes as a center panel. All hang singly or in groups. 26" wide, 5' long, with gilded wood dowels top and bottom. They store rolled in cardboard tube. Each $12.50.

C. EUGENE STEPHENSON DECORATOR

Our three Golden Scrolls, hung like a triptych, might be all the ornament a room needs. The set of three will make a wall of dominant beauty. Set, $37.50.

PHOTOGRAPHED AT CASSARD AND WALKER, INC.

Above a congenially scaled piece of furniture, a single Golden Angel Scroll "builds up" the piece as it brings you. Half-Spheres add color.

PHOTOGRAPHED AT DUNBAR FURNITURE CO.

Three Golden Star Mosaic Scrolls create a geometric textured wall in a tailored room where the pictorial Angels might not be as appropriate. Scrolls are fine enough to be year-round decoration.

PHOTOGRAPHED AT DUNBAR FURNITURE CO.

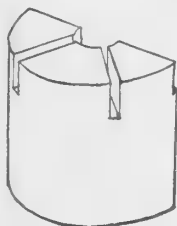

Two Golden Angel Scrolls, hung in good relationship to the scale and shape of a love-seat, prove that effective holiday trimming depends on sound decorating principles.

Golden Baroque Filigree Four-Way Fan-out is a linking-together of four Golden Baroque Filigree Flats, creating a versatile ornament which may fan out fully or part-way. Hang it like a wall sconce, with two wings flat to the wall, the other two extending like candelabra branches. Or hang it fully open like a chandelier. Turned upside down on its wide end, it becomes a glittering Christmas tree. Its identical Baroque curves compose easily with Flats in limitless arrangements. Like Flats, it is tough cardboard, covered in gilt foil. Wings, with cut-ins to hang ornaments, are linked by rings. Two sizes: 18" diameter by 24" high, $3.50 each; 24" diameter by 36" high, $6.

Green Holder, of green foam plastic, is not an ornament but an ingenious accessory, designed to be used with Fan-outs as a holder for foliage. Simply jab stems into the plastic. Notches fit the Fan-out wings, keeping them firmly spread out. It is 4" high, 3 1/2" wide, each 50¢.

See the versatility of our Fan-outs. A pair of small ones at each side of an entryway are joined, one upright, the other upside down, and collared with a wreath of glitter balls and greens, stuck in a Green Holder. Doormat is a half-moon of American arbor vitae branches, studded with Norway spruce.

Enhance the architecture of a picture window by framing it in an outline of Golden Baroque Flats, like a canopy of gilded lacy metalwork. Central ornament here is a Golden Baroque Fan-out, two of its wings lined up with the Flats, the other two opened out like the arms of a sconce. Pine boughs spray out from a Green Holder.

PHOTOGRAPH BY WILLIAM HOWLAND

On our cover, the dazzling gold and crystal "chandelier" is a Fan-out hung by Golden Rope lavishly sparkled with 48 Plastic Prisms. All this, without Rope $12.50.

Place Mats and Coasters of Golden Baroque Filigree have the same design feeling as all our gold-foil cardboard ornaments, so you can integrate table settings with the over-all trim of the house. Dinner plate and glass rest on the inside rim of the open-centered mats are framed in scrolls. Surfaced in gilt on one side, they can be used many ways. Mat, 11" x 16"; coaster, 5" x 6"; in bags of 4 sets. Each bag, $2.80.

Pendant of Golden Baroque Filigree is an endlessly useful, open-center medallion of extravagantly scrolled cardboard, covered in gilt foil on both sides. Its cartouche shape, usable upright or upside down, suggests itself as a bold background for greens, glitter balls, Half-Spheres as a bright "catch" for swags or as table glitter. 16" wide x 24" high, each $1.50.

WILLIAM HOWLAND

PHOTOGRAPHED AT CASSARD AND WALKER, INC.

Golden Baroque Filigree Pendants, used as "catches" for a swag of Golden Ropes, turn a small doorway into an assertive focal point. Bright cabochons are large Half-Spheres.

IDEA BY JANE ELLIS

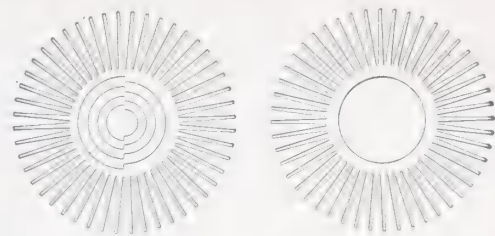

The versatility of this whole collection invites you to try something original, such as Golden Baroque Flats patterning a flush door—like elaborate strap hinges of gold.

IDEA BY JANE ELLIS

Again a simple doorway transformed into a splendid splash of beauty, this time with an eye-filling scutcheon which is merely a joining of two large Golden Baroque Flats.

Golden Starbursts are radiant rounds of all-over gilt-foil cardboard, circled with slender, light-catching rays, like happy golden explosions. Use them endlessly—flat against a wall, as table mats, as "collars" for vases. Combine them with other decorations, or let them dangle free like mobiles. They are in two forms: Spiral-center Starbursts have intricately cut centers which can pull out in openwork spiral pattern and cast lovely shadows when hung free. Open-center Starbursts are open rings of radiating gold beams to frame other ornaments or objects, or to be filled in with colorful Half-Spheres. All come in four diameters, 8½", 11½", 16" and 24", at 25¢, 60¢, $1, $2.50.

Half-Spheres are gleaming domes of unbreakable metallic plastic, colored in yellow-green, emerald, turquoise and cobalt blue. They fit into Open-Center Starbursts, but may also be used against any surface like cabochons. Two joined together form a full-round ball. 3", 4", 6", 8½", at 60¢, $1, $1.75, $3.

"Stained-glass" Plastic Panels are easily cut. For a multi-pane window, clip medallion motifs in quarters and rearrange them around mullions.

MAYNARD PARKER

You can make free-hanging dimensional ornaments (inspired, here, by Jane Ellis) by clipping out the round motifs from our small "Stained-glass" plastic squares. Cut one disk neatly in half, then slip it over a solid disk. Fasten with clear tape. Hook a small Plastic Prism into this four-winged bauble. It's now a tree trim or the makings of a light-flashing, shadow-casting mobile (left). All our decorations are more breathtaking when light plays on them. For lighting ideas, see page 110.

Present It Lavishly

Here are 54 ways to give even the simplest foods the splendor of the season itself

By VIRGINIA STANTON
House Beautiful's Party Editor

One of the secrets of entertaining at any time of year is to create an atmosphere or mood, then play it up in everything—in the kind of flowers you use, in decorations, tableware, linens and, of course, in the food itself. But the glorious part of Christmas is that you don't need to wrack your brains to give your entertaining an aura all its own. The Christmas mood is ready-made. It's the open-hearted, open-handed spirit of the season. And its symbols are everything that's splendid and opulent—the gleam of gold and silver, the precious sheen of fine linen, the lushness of greens, the glory of lights. Your guests carry the mood with them when they come through the door. They're expecting the festive, the splendid, the extra-special. And in the spirit of the occasion, you want anything you offer them—whether it's a glass of port or a turkey dinner—to reflect the mood of lavishness they feel in their hearts.

And I'm sure it's the lavishness of the Christmas season that makes everyone love it so. I know for me it's the one time of the year when I feel thoroughly justified in letting myself get gloriously carried away with glitter and glamour and elegance. It just can't be too "swell-elegant" for me—and I'm normally the tailored type. I get the biggest kick out of gussying up the house with gleam and glitter. And, of course, because we Stantons are sort of hospitality-happy, and this is the season when the latchstring is really out, I love to make a great (Continued overleaf)

Oyster stew for Christmas Eve as in Old Charleston, but with a modern difference. Antique gold and white tureen holds Campbell's quick-frozen oyster stew (with added oysters—one 12-oz. package Dulany's quick-frozen oysters to 3 cans oyster stew). Garnish harks back to yesterdays in South Carolina. Instead of usual flurry of paprika, mace is used. Or, if you prefer, parched and pounded benne seeds, generally called sesame seeds. Empire tureen, David Weiss, N.Y.C. Antique ladle and gold and white Minton plates, from Tiffany. Bowl and plate from Plummer holds Keebler's Pilot Crackers and N.B.C. Oysterettes. Dessert spoons, "Rondo" by Gorham.

Feast the eye this festive season while you pamper
the palate with fine food

Fireworks for a Christmas party! It's an old Southern tradition. And what could be better than sparklers? Coconut snowballs, a specialty at the Newark Airport Restaurant, are served in a darkened room with 4th of July sparklers afire. To make snowballs, roll scoops or balls of ice cream in Baker's Angel Flake Coconut (tender thin flakes rather than shreds, more moist and with fresher flavor). Snowballs should be set in freezer at least one hour before serving, may be kept on hand days, weeks, even months. Serve with or without a sauce—like Kettle Cove Rum Elegante, in a jar ready to spoon. Comely at any celebration is the Martha Washington Great Cake from the Kitchens of Lucy Ann Gray in Alexandria, Virginia. Original recipe "wrote by Martha Custis for her Grandmama" calls for 40 eggs, 4 lbs. of butter, 5 lbs. of fruit. The huge receipt is still followed, but is now baked in Turk's head molds or loaves as shown. By mail, 1/4 lb. cake is $3 postpaid.

A festive fruit finale, the peach bowl translated from summer into winter. Instead of usual fresh peach, use a large and perfect Raffeto brandied (not pickled or spiced) peach. Cover with chilled champagne. Sip champagne, then eat peach with an iced teaspoon. The holiday double champagne bucket from Plummer holds not one but two bottles of Piper Heidsieck champagne. Crystal bowl glasses, almost 12-in. tall, from Carole Stupell; Venetian glass plates, David Weiss.

"spectacular" of the holiday meals and casual snacks I serve my family and friends. Let them be brilliant and bountiful, is my motto. But if you think this means that I exhaust myself and the budget doing it, you're definitely wrong.

I used to think, as a great many people still do, that only the most elaborate viands, full of rare and expensive ingredients, were worthy of Christmas. I used to get involved in complicated production numbers that called for all sorts of long-winded, tedious procedures. And by January I'd be so exhausted, I could hardly hold up my head to read the bad news in the December food bills.

But, take my word for it. I've discovered that it's not what you serve so much as the way you serve it that makes the difference between a sensational meal and an ordinary one. And this goes for all year round, too! I can turn a bunch of lowly carrots into a Lucullan masterpiece—and so can you. It's all in how you dish them up. Given a handsome, unusual container, a fling of tarragon and a dash of cream, and there—you've raised a simple food to new heights of importance. You've not only made it taste like something special, you've made it look important, and that's one of the great secrets of glamorizing food. People eat with their eyes, too.

How do you learn the knack of it all? Well, this is where the fun begins. Start by ignoring the obvious and experimenting with the unusual. Parsley, for instance, is the time-worn and hackneyed garnish for sandwich trays. But a flower is so much more intriguing. I may deck my trays with a single huge blossom, such as a tuberous begonia or a camellia or even a plump geranium. If flowers are scarce, I sometimes use shells, and at Christmastime you can actually carry the décor of the whole room onto your serving trays by trimming them with Christmas ornaments. I have gilded signs of the zodiac—the fish, the crab and the bull—which I use as symbols in the center of fish trays and cold meat platters. Their glitter is especially appropriate for Christmas, although they're also good the year round.

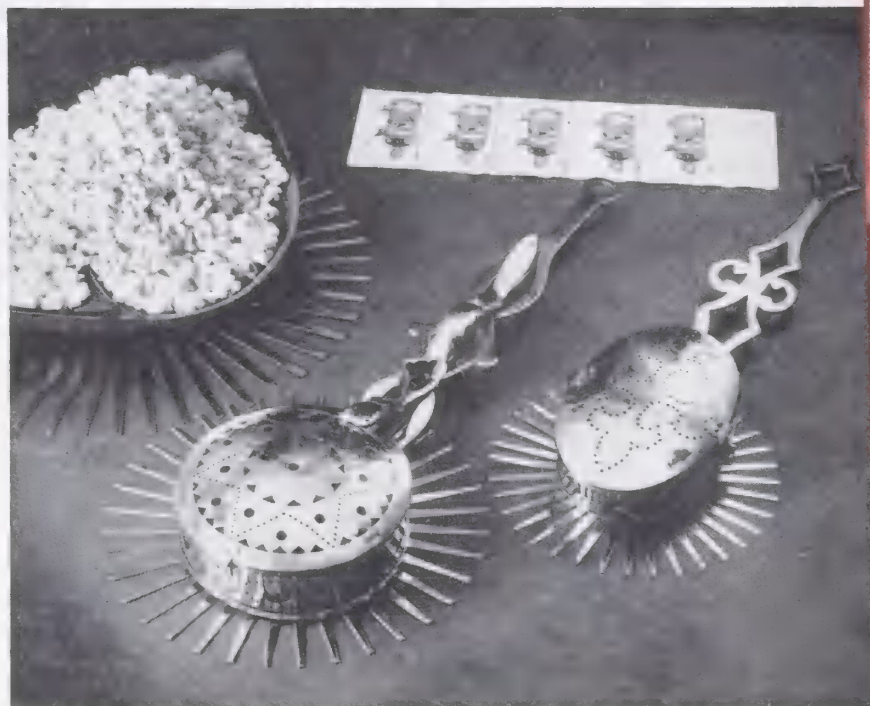

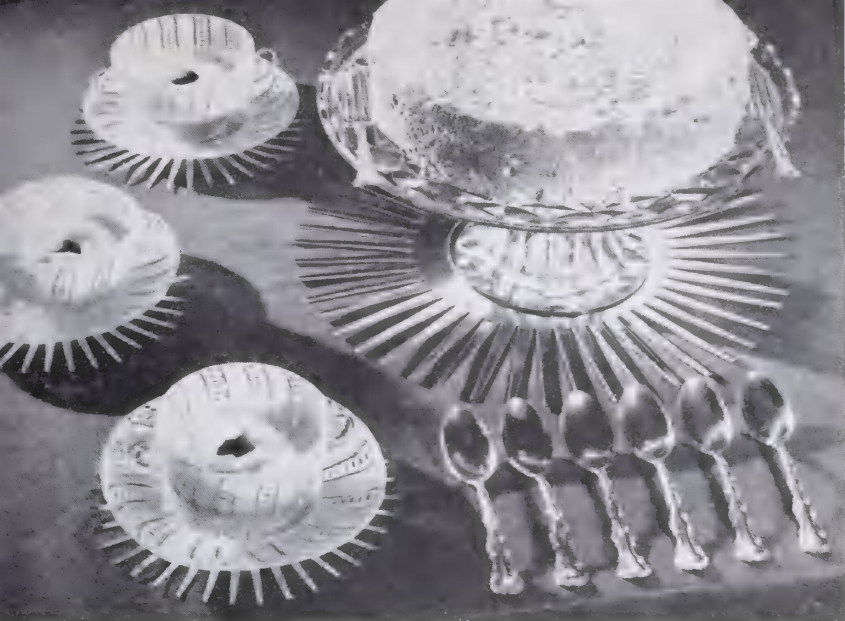

Unusual containers are another sure way of getting a little drama into your meals. (Continued overleaf)

After a rich meal, a light and airy ending—old-fashioned Floating Island, made from the new Jell-O instant no-cook Lemon Pudding with an egg yolk beaten into it. The egg white whipped makes the topping. Have on hand a sugar-dusted angel cake made from a mix in a large spring-form pan instead of the conventional ring. Accessories echo the snowy fragility of taste and textures. Crystal cake plate on crystal stand, J. F. Robinson, N.Y.C. Lacy Venetian bowls and plates, David Weiss. Dessert forks and spoons, Towle's "Old Colonial."

Ambrosia belongs to Christmas in Mississippi, Alabama, Texas. Particularly pretty, particularly easy to serve from the buffet, this version in orange shells has the added bewitchment of liqueur. Cut oranges in halves, taking off a bit of the base, if necessary, so shells will stand level. Remove and cut fruit into small pieces, then fill the shells with alternate layers of fruit and coconut, generously bedewed with orange-flavored liqueur. Use Cointreau as pictured or Grand Marnier. Chill thoroughly. Always make ambrosia several hours ahead of time, so that the flavors merge and blend.

Roasted chestnuts in shining brass warmers and freshly-made hot buttered popcorn aux fines herbes are picturesque, informal and warming to serve with cocktails, hot buttered rum, Tom and Jerrys or simply beside the fire on a winter's evening. Make the popcorn in front of the crowd using tinned Jolly Time popcorn and your electric popper or skillet. Melt butter in a pipkin, add a combination of herbs, fresh or dried—parsley, chives, chervil, tarragon, rosemary (not less than 3, not more than 7 herbs, say the French). Allow herbs to stand in hot butter several minutes before buttering your popcorn. A goodly sprinkle of sea salt goes especially well. So does freshly ground black pepper. Chestnut warmers shown are copied from antique English models and come from S. P. Skinner Company, New York.

A golden cookie tree is for young visitors like a vision out of a fairy tale. House BEAUTIFUL's own Golden Baroque Four-way Fan-outs, described on page 120, are set upside down to make the tree, which is hung with delectable ornaments and animals on gilt cords. Pewter decanter and mugs from A. S. Van Dugteren and Sons are for icy cold chocolate milk, or, if you prefer, "party milk" made with a few drops of red or green vegetable coloring flavored with a favorite extract like pistachio, for instance. Or you might try apple or peach blossom flavoring (Glen Hall Brands, East Orange, New Jersey.) These cookies came from the Woman's Exchange in New York but can easily be made at home. Clay shapes may even be cut from Pillsbury's new frozen ice box cookies (see page 8). Punch hanging-holes with a skewer before baking. Festive apron cloth is from Hadley House, Long View, Washington.

A mincemeat dessert that's exciting, different, much easier than pie! Prepared mincemeat heated in Towle's silver chafing dish with Myers' rich, dark and spicy Jamaica rum. (Use about  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup rum to 2 cups mincemeat.) For further drama, blaze another  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup of rum. Flames will rise, bright and sure, if you warm the liquor slightly in a ramekin, silver cup or porringer, perhaps over a candle flame. Set fire to it and pour over or into the dish. Serve the spirited mincemeat with a scoop or fancy mold of ice cream. A plate of crisp, but not-too-rich cookies or wafers might be passed. Here, FFV lemon wafers and Neapolitans. Glass dessert dish is Val St. Lambert; china, Royal Jackson; silver, Georg Jensen.

For instance, if you are having cold lobster or cracked crab, serve the sour cream sauce in a large scalloped clam shell on the same tray. Surround the shell with the colorful seafood, and you've created a picture that provokes all sorts of delighted exclamations. And everyone thinks the sauce is even dreamier than it is—and it is plenty dreamy!

What you do is to make every tray or platter a decoration in itself, treating it like a miniature table. Keep all your garnishes in the same spirit, of course, so you don't have a mishmash of unrelated decorations. You'll see how this little trick perks up the whole business and establishes an atmosphere of loveliness that entrances your guests.

Now don't get me wrong about this. I am not saying that a glamorous effect is more important than the quality of the food. No amount of glitter can disguise a poor meal. But it is so easy to have both flavor and beauty. Every tray I run up is filled to capacity. Each item on it is carefully selected and tenderly placed. But no matter how simple the dish, I do my best at careful preparation and seasoning. I like to use large-size plates for some courses instead of the usual-size ones—they add the dramatic touch.

Actually, the size of things is terribly important to bear in mind. Giant- or over-size is as vital in some cases as the tiniest size is in others. For instance, if you're serving peas, remember that baby peas are the sweetest—and prettiest; baby string beans are tenderest, and the smallest asparagus is as interesting as the giant asparagus.

Eggnog for dessert! Why not? Most people find it too filling between meals. This spoon-thick version is a modern blender translation of Louisville's famous Eggnog Superb. To serve six or eight, place yolks of three eggs in blender along with  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup sugar, blend about 1 minute or until light, spongy, daffodil yellow. Then, while blender is still running, pour into center 1 cup bourbon whisky. (Blender makes it unnecessary to add whisky "drop by drop" as old directions insist.) In separate well-chilled bowl, with rotary beater, whip 1 cup heavy cream not too stiff. Combine blended mixture with whipped cream and pour into icy cold crystal or silver bowl. Many people like to fold in at last minute stiffly beaten whites of eggs. Makes a more voluminous, lighter "nog." As accompaniment, thinly sliced pound cake, less cloying than fruit cake. Sara Lee's frozen pound cake. Crystal punch bowl and silver ladle, Black, Starr and Gorham. Sherbet glass, Val St. Lambert. Coke plates by Spode.

The Christmas feast is fittingly served, against a background as splendid as the holiday, set forth like a jewel in a rare and lovely setting. Lavish, sumptuous, the very essence of the season—a candle-lit table laid with gold, a tureen that bespeaks abundance, the full bloom of roses, the festive glow of wine. Precious candelabra are antiques from Charles Hall, Inc. Tureen, gold-ringed china and crystal and the opulent gold-washed sterling flatware are all from Tiffany and Company, that revered old firm which recently has taken on new sumptuousness itself. Table setting at Cassard and Walker, Inc.

A Della Robbia wreath for the Christmas bird—a glossy garnish of fruits and lemon leaves which rings the mainstay of the feast—in this case, the traditional roast goose. Unlike many a trimming, this is a joy for the carver because the garnish lifts off, all in one piece, leaving the bird unencumbered on the platter. When the feast is over, this luscious chaplet may remain on the table as a centerpiece. Or hang it on the wall as a wreath or use it as a decorative collar around your Christmas punch bowl.

The very tiny asparagus is reminiscent of the wild asparagus of France, and a huge platter of it is as impressive as a jumbo-size platter. In serving corn on the cob, cook it in the husks and roll husks back. The green leaves add color, besides making the ears of corn look larger. Color variety gives vegetables such a lift. If you are having a large whole head of cauliflower, surround it with masses of broccoli, like a contrasting ruching. If you are having zucchini squash, add slices of yellow crook neck squash to make the dish more interesting.

I also use vegetables as decorative notes. Have you ever thought of serving a single head of butter lettuce to each guest? It is a joy to behold, for its color and shape are lovely. It must be carefully washed and well iced and partly peeled down. If you want a color accent, sliced cherrystone tomatoes add to its glamour. I don't know if anyone (Please turn to page 185)

Coffee also serves as a light dessert when it's Irish coffee—strong, black and sweet—poured into a glass over a silver spoon (to prevent cracking). Add to coffee in each glass a jigger of Irish whisky and top with cream, whipped only until thick and foamy. Silver and decanter from Plummer; Waterford glasses, Irish Promotion Board. Coffee urn, International Silver Company.

Amazingly photogenic is this Course One to go along with drinks in the living room: a serve-yourself seafood platter with shrimp cooked in white wine and herbs and rosy nuggets of quick-frozen South African lobster tail meat to eat on thin slices of unpeeled cucumber with a green mayonnaise, almost as garlicky as the aioli of Provence.

Cocktail on-the-rocks is THE newest. Sensible too! No more watery "dividends," no more warm cocktails. Emerald urn and chubby glasses, Carole Stupell, Madison Ave., New York; brass tray, Charles Hall, New York.

Icy cold for cordials, glasses must be! An antique Wedgwood monteith filled with tinted shaved ice provides glamorous chilling along with ice for a crème de menthe frappé. Cruet-like decanter, Plummer, New York.

Spotlight on brioche for the buffet served forth in a golden basket from Carole Stupell. Originally intended for sewing-basket, it can work all year round.

Low calorie high style—a pyramid of meringues served with instant dietetic pots de crème, studded with cranberries and served with dietetic Dzerta instant chocolate pudding. Brass trivet, Charles Hall; pot de crème set, Georg Jensen, Fifth Avenue, New York.

HOME OF MR. AND MRS. WILLIAM E. LASON

"Something old, something new, something borrowed, something blue" refers here to the setting for a mid-winter holiday dinner. Old is the Williamsburg "Potpourri" pattern. New is F. Schumacher's fine cotton print and matching Wedgwood plate. Borrowed from the 18th Century are the silver pattern by Stieff and Blenko's baluster-stem goblets. Chairs by Kittinger. All these furnishings, courtesy of Craft House, Williamsburg, Virginia. Cloth and napkins, subtly shaded in blue-green, are Irish linen damask.

Christmas table, for all its seasonal gleam and color, is still keyed to the room itself. This is good decorating all year round. "Potpourri" motif of china is matched to the drapery and chair fabric. See how linen, glitter balls and chorus of carnations in the antique silver and crystal epergne repeat the room's scarlet and blue. Even the wine, California Pinot Noir, glows in color harmony.

Except for the goose, nothing on this dinner menu requires any real cooking. Everything is ready or almost ready to serve. And even the goose, as it comes into the kitchen, is a far, far different bird from those that hung high in the fireplaces of our foremothers.

The goose that you order by mail from Candlewood Farms in Brookfield, Connecticut, arrives quick-frozen (8 to 15 pounds, 90¢ a pound, postage prepaid anywhere in the United States). A plump and beautiful bird is whistle-clean, pin-feathered, drawn, the giblets in a separate packet, so that the goose may be set hard-frozen into the oven to cook. Unpricked and without stuffing, please, at 300° F. We have found that pricking carries away the juices along with the fat and that the stuffing seems to remove the flavor from the meat.

So many people have a mental block against cooking a goose, probably because of lack of experience. But try it our way (see page 201). It will be rich, moist, but not fatty, the skin golden crisp without a trace of burn. And you'll also have a side treasure of schmaltz and grebenes to add a glorious flavor to appetizers and vegetables for months to come.

Cooking aside, the garnishing and presentation of this Christmas dinner becomes an exercise in artistry. Instead of drudgery, it takes planning and thinking ahead and afterwards a certain creative effort, not unlike that which is required to put together the lines that make a sonnet.

The platter of smoked fishes that you serve in the living room should display a nice regard for contrast in color, texture, shape and size: for instance, creamy white of sturgeon near the rose of salmon, the amber glow of smoked shrimp, the tawny shimmering skin of smoked whitefish. Perhaps you will use a sectioned plate or separate one smoked fish from another with borders of chopped Italian parsley or chives.

The green turtle soup, canned of course (Who wants to tangle with a turtle?), will have a last-minute addition of your own best and driest sherry, and the soup plates or cups will have been heated. The goose will come to the table encircled by a Della Robbia wreath, as pictured on page 133. And who would know that the wild rice the chestnut purée, the red cabbage, and even the garniture of sliced apples have all come out of tins? Or who would guess that the wonderfully homemade-tasting pound cake studded with fruit (Please turn to page 201)

That new phenomenon— mail-order food buying

Mrs. America is going to any lengths to feed her family the very best. One of the ways she's doing it is shopping by mail, reaching out into the whole world to procure the finest

Americans are eating fancier than ever in history—fancier than practically anyone is aware. The best, the rare, the novel and the de luxe are experiencing such a sales boom that the figures can hardly be compiled before they are out of date. The producers who sell “the best” are having such a spectacular success that they won't discuss their figures at all, but will only tell you that they have “more than 100,000 customers on their lists.”

Most amazing is that this boom is occurring out of sight, in no visible public place. (This article is probably the first time the situation has ever been put into public print.) It is occurring in the United States mails, unseen and therefore hard to measure. But after six months of investigation, HOUSE BEAUTIFUL estimates that between 4 and 5 million American families are doing some food buying by mail from probably 1,000 (maybe even 2,000) sources and spending 80 to 100 million dollars in the process.

The foods being shipped as a result of this mail ordering range from homemade specialties like pickles and jams, which are actually produced in private homes and on farms, to commercially packed, high-quality but not volume-produced staples. Some of the best sellers are truly staples, such as soups, salad dressings, meats, seasonings, canned fruit and such. Others are novelties and out-and-out esoterica appealing only to the initiated and enlightened.

The only thing that these thousands of food products share in common is that they are either very, very good or else unique in some respect. Since some mighty fine foods are distributed in our better groceries and supermarkets, clearly some other element is at work in this booming mail-order food business.

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL thinks this element is connoisseurship. It is a knowledgeability—call it sensitivity—that enables people to distinguish small, subtle differences between things. It lets you recognize the taste difference between a Virginia ham, a Kentucky ham, a Dutch ham and an Italian ham. Obviously one must have tasted them all—attentively and with interest—before connoisseurship can even begin to bud. For one cannot want what one does not know exists.

There is no other way to explain the enormous mail ordering of such quality items as the superb Temple oranges grown in Florida which have a short season and are very perishable and therefore not loved by commercial handlers; or the small “solo” papaya of Hawaii, which are tastier than the big, more widely distributed types grown in Florida or Mexico.

It is knowledgeability that prompts people to order their dates direct from the date grower at harvest time—even specifying the variety—even though dates are available in almost any grocery store. Why? Because grower-packed dates are more moist, less mashed together, more succulent, each one a quality event in the same way that estate-bottled wines tend to be better.

This connoisseurship is putting millions of Americans into the same class as kings and rajahs who sent their stewards to faraway places to bring back home the juiciest, the tenderest, the plumpest, the most delicate of the regional specialties. Only now our stewards travel on a three cent stamp, and we have as many stewards as we have stamps. As a result we are ranging the whole gastronomic gamut—from the wild berries and game of mountain and meadow through to the modern triumphs of hybridization and hand-nurtured agriculture.

Such connoisseurship embraces the whole world—foreign worlds as well as our own. For instance, an amazing number of Americans are learning the difference between Greek olives—those tiny, shriveled, black “lumps of gold”—and the mottled green and brown tree-ripened olives of California. Yet 20 years ago the average olive eater had never heard of, or tried, either of these esoterica.

Chief reasons why people are buying by mail:

- ▶ To get old-fashioned recipes and farm foods.
- ▶ To secure ingredients for foreign cooking sold only by foreign specialists.
- ▶ To procure not-so-rare staples which they can't find in the average grocery store.
- ▶ To save time, so they don't have to run all over town going from specialty shop to specialty shop.
- ▶ To get de luxe esoterica and novelties that friends won't have met and which make “conversation pieces” at parties.

gilt-edge list of fine

Potage Saint-Germain

Cream of pea soup, similar to this, is one of the most renowned dishes of Ile-de-France and its capital, Paris, where it is traditionally made from the petits pois of Clamart. The Chambord container provides 2 large soup-platefuls, but for a full course dinner, you can count on 4 small servings, especially if you add about  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup of milk. Garnish with fresh mint, a sprig of tarragon or tiny buttered croutons. Potage Saint-Germain sells for \$1. There is also a Bisque Homard—a cream of lobster—very, very rich but very, very good too. \$1.50.

Order this memorable meal from the Chambord

Quick-frozen and sent by air express are many specialties of New York's famous Café Chambord, widely known as one of the finest — and most expensive — restaurants in the United States

A gourmet's dream has come true. Now in Seattle or Los Angeles, St. Louis, Dallas or Miami—anywhere reasonably close to a major airport—you can enjoy at your own table a dinner cooked by the famous chefs of Le Café Chambord. The cost, even including shipping charges, will probably be a little less than you would pay in the restaurant itself.

"But is the frozen as good as the freshly-cooked dish?"

To get the answer to that most important question, a group of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL editors took a blindfold taste test at the Chambord. In every instance the quick-frozen food taken from regular stock and heated according to directions was fully as dreamy as the just-cooked version. At least one editor insisted that the quick-frozen Pompano Veronique was perhaps even a shade more exquisite—the fish a little finer textured, the white grapes a bit juicier.

Complete menu or any item we mention may be ordered from Le Café Chambord, 803 3rd Ave., N.Y.C. Send check, money order or charge it. No c.o.d.'s. You can pay air express charges on delivery. Minimum order, $10.

Filet of Pompano Veronique

Most delicate fish in a white wine sauce with grapes. Instead of sole, as in France, Chambord uses pompano flown fresh daily from the Gulf of Mexico. Tiny, Thompson seedless grapes take the place of the muscat grapes called for in Escoffier's own recipe. We have found that 1 package ($4.50) will serve 2 as a main course, 4 as an entrée. The same thing holds true for other Chambord seafood specialties, which include: Coquilles de fruits de mer gratinés (seafood au gratin) $2.50. Homard grillé au beurre Viquérons (lobster in garlic butter sauce) $4.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY GEORGE LAZARNICK

Caneton à l'orange Grand Marnier

Whole roast duckling with oranges and Grand Marnier Liqueur. To serve with all the elegance it deserves, you might blaze it at the table with a couple of jiggers of cognac and/or Grand Marnier. Provides 2 large servings, 4 moderate size, $7.50. Try also: Cornish Hen Farcie Perigourdine (stuffed with wild rice and truffled pâté, $4.25. Serves 1 or possibly 2—depending. Chicken Chambord, whole roast chicken with a special Chambord sauce and garniture of cèpes, tiny onions and rissole potatoes, $6. Serves 2 or 3. Also Chicken Sauté in red wine, $3.25. Serves 2 or 3.

La Bombe de Noël

A Christmas bombe of raspberry and pralined pistachio ice cream to wake nostalgic memories of long-gone elegance. There is a garnishing flower of candied fruits already set in place, but you may add, if you wish, a border of slightly sweetened and lightly flavored whipped cream. For the prettiest effect use a pastry tube. Although it is intended to serve 4, it is sufficient, we have found, for at least 6. Any unused portion of the bombe may, of course, be replaced in the freezer. Especially created for HOUSE BEAUTIFUL's menu, this is Chambord's only mail-order dessert, $2.50.

The Fine Art of Giving a Frivolous Gift

By MARION COUGH

No gifts are more fun to get or more fun to give than the ones that tickle the eye and bring a smile to the heart. These are the frivolities, the endearing trifles of silliness or whimsy that anyone could live without. But can you imagine what life would be like if we didn't have these bits of inconsequential nonsense to brighten the daily regime?

As of this season, the shops are burgeoning with giddiness, good, bad, and indifferent, waiting only for you to make your choices. And for the very reason that there is so much to choose from, a wise choice of a frivolous gift becomes a matter of the most sensitive selection.

A frivolity, if you'll permit us to get analytical about so lighthearted a subject, is intended to amuse. If it also does something practical, fine. But its chief reason for being is to create delight with its novelty, ingenuity or wittiness. A frivolity is something gaily made, usually lovingly made, something that seems to radiate the fun its originator felt in the making of it. Cheapness or sleaziness is no criterion, by any means, for the frivolous may be truly precious and very costly. It is of its nature ephemeral. It is not supposed to last forever, to change one's life or, for that matter, the looks of one's house. Indeed, if the amusing little piece you're tempted to buy threatens to take over the limelight in its intended surroundings, forget it. It is not a true frivolity, but an intrusion, and you'd be wiser to give something else.

A successful frivolity is, of all gifts, the most highly personal and, therefore, the most flattering to give. You have to understand someone pretty well in order to take liberties with his sense of humor—and that is really what a frivolous gift does. It tells your "giftee" how you evaluate his wit and his appreciation of fun, and if he isn't delighted with what he gets, you've pulled a boner. But if his eyes light up in a smile, he's a closer friend than ever.

And this brings us to a sad little hazard in the giving of the frivolous. There is a delicate line of balance between the acceptable frivolity—the light, gay, amusing, sometimes naughty but never coarse bit of divertisement—and the kind of heavy-handed vulgarity that is nothing but a bad joke. The obvious gaucheries, the ones that are clearly offensive, are easily spotted—the naked-women beer mugs, the double entendres, the drunk-on-the-lamp-post motifs.

But there are other gaucheries, too—the self-consciously smart-alecky something that tries so hard to be clever, the over-decorated, the quaintsy, the crudely drawn, the sloppily made. The test boils down to this: If it isn't lovely, it doesn't rate as a frivolity or as anything else. For there is a kind of innocent beauty in the truly frivolous, like the lilt of a child's laugh, which is as basic to it as its whimsy.

Look for this and your frivolous choices will be joyously received. On the next three pages see a group of candidates that have met our test of frivolous giving.

AN INVITATION TO PURE JAZZ

It is not theater music, movie music, dance music or mood music. It's the sound of America in motion, of music in process of inventing itself

By ERIC LARRABEE

The sound of jazz, like a train whistle in the night, is embedded in the American imagination. It fits naturally into that aural and visual pattern which we recognize as our country's, even where the details of the landscape are unfamiliar, since it could not exist anywhere else. Whatever its effect on you, jazz music is a part of the musical tradition available to all. The land was ours, as Robert Frost has said, before we were the land's—and so it is with jazz, which belongs to you even if you do not belong to it.

The sound of jazz is the characteristic American sound of forward motion, with the driving momentum and controlled beat of machinery in action. It is the music of a people who have married themselves to the steam and gasoline engine and have grown up with its rhythmic regularities in their ears. It is a music of abundant expressiveness, even though it was given us by those of our people who have largely known deprivation and despair.

It is the sound of its own instruments—the proud snarl of trumpets; the looping ornaments of clarinets and reedy plaints of saxophones; the pungent strumming of double basses and guitars; the never-monotonous necessity of drums; the punctuated ripples of the vibraharp and the orderly comment of pianos; the gutturals of singing voices and the full-throated swallowings of trombones.

The sounds of jazz are many. It was never just one music, with just one tone of voice. It can even, in the hands of a Mahalia Jackson, reach the religious (Hear Columbia record CL644). Like any other style of musical composing and performing, it can convey the sound of joy as well as sorrow, fondness as well as anger, want as well as satiety, and anticipation as well as regret; but it can convey them, above all, mint-fresh from the minds of their makers. When you hear the best of jazz, you hear the process of musical invention itself, in which playing and writing have become one and there is no break between the thought and its expression. The music has the stamp of its uniqueness still upon it.

Ideally, no jazz piece is ever twice the same. It is not primarily intended to be written down, frozen into fixed form, and repeated ever afterward with slavish precision. Though it can be scored (and some of it now is), its essence is extemporization—the process of making it up as you go along, producing melodies that have never been heard before and may never be again, and putting everything you know and are into each. Without some depth of emotion, classical music cannot be played well; but without the fullness of feeling that releases spontaneous creativity, jazz cannot be played at all.

Traditionally, all music is like this. In most times and in most places it has been an art in which the performer enjoyed privileges we think of as belonging only to the composer. Our concert-hall atmosphere, with its somber and reverential hush, is a recent affectation that goes back no farther than nineteenth-century Europe; in the long perspective, it is the exception rather than the rule. Some serious music critics have even begun to argue that it is in jazz, rather than contemporary classical composition, that the main-stream of music now flows.

And jazz is not merely extemporized, it is extemporized by more than one person at once. It is disciplined and liberating at the same time: each player is both bound and free. He is limited by the harmonies of the piece being played, but repeatedly at liberty to range within those limits in choosing his own notes and phrases. It is a continuous exercise in reconciling the demands of the group with those of the individual—a problem which has pre-occupied Americans since their earliest days and which jazz, if only esthetically, has gone a long way to solve. To this extent it may almost claim to be the natural music of democracy.

No other kind of music is so American as jazz, yet no other American music is so hungrily sought after elsewhere in the world. It could have been born and brought up only where and when it was, in the (Please turn to page 182)

25 Gifts for discriminating gardeners

By JEAN LAWSON

The ideal gift for a person who gardens is apt to be something he has always regarded as dream stuff. Either he has longed to have it, but would never buy it for himself, or it is something for which he has felt a need, but never was sure it existed. Unless you know the person well or have powers of telepathy, you'll probably need some guidance. Here we suggest gifts of both kinds, for gardeners of varying proficiency and interest, in a price range from 25 cents to $30.

Gifts for the Garden

Anticipate a summer of outdoor entertaining with a weatherproof string of plastic lanterns, which can be hung from a tree or trellis and plugged into a nearby electrical outlet. The shades of this attractive outdoor unit are of ribbed plastic, all white, or yellow and white. Shades fasten, three to a 30-foot string, with strong, wind-proof clamps over molded watertight sockets. For large areas several strings can be joined end to end, or you can buy a special, 100-foot, ten-lantern cord. The 30-foot string costs $29.95 from Lam Workshop, 404 Main Street, Wakefield, Massachusetts. Gardeners with problems of privacy or shade, plus a flair for construction, might welcome a gift of the lightweight reed mats so popular on the West Coast. Suitable for fences, screens or overhead shelter, they are among the most versatile garden building materials. A mat 6 feet 4 inches by 25 feet costs $17.95, from Lastreto-Phillips Commercial Co., Inc., 510 Battery Street, San Francisco, California, and Patio Specialty Co., 1101 Sutton Ave., Mobile, Ala.

Garden gifts deluxe

Here are the best pails for gardeners we've seen. First, a 2½-gallon plastic number with pouring spout, tight-fitting lid and measurements marked along the side, for convenience in carrying and mixing garden chemicals. Pail with lid, $4.50. Plas-Tex Corporation, Box 64396, Los Angeles 64, Calif. The kingsize stainless-steel pail will see a fortunate gardener through a lifetime of heavy use. Capacity: 11 quarts or a dozen rose plants kept damp before planting; price, $13.40. Also in stainless steel is a 32-ounce graduate, a gift so handsome, yet practical, the receiver may have trouble keeping it for garden purposes; $5.35. And to transfer his plant food or insecticide concoctions to sprayer or applicator, or gasoline to the power mower, we suggest a sturdy, long-stemmed, well-balanced stainless-steel funnel, which holds 15 ounces and costs $5.25. All stainless-steel items may be ordered from United Surgical Supplies Company, 154 Midland Avenue, Port Chester, N.Y.

Good books are always good gifts for any gardener any time

From the famous Librairie Larousse comes the finest plant picture book of the year. Beautés de la Flore Exotique, with 85 pages of remarkable photography, 24 in brilliant color. With accuracy that would gratify a botanist, the book records plant wonders of the world, for both globe trotters, who recognize the giant fan of a Madagascar traveler's tree outlined against the sky, and interested plantmen who will find close-ups of flora not mentioned in any English or American horticultural book. Written in French, with botanical names in the universal Latin, it's for anyone who has ever seen beauty in a plant. Order from The Golden Griffin, 611 Madison Avenue, New York City 22. $6.

A Book of Wild Flowers is a collection of 160 watercolors by Elsa Felski, reproduced with meticulous care in eight colors and accompanied with plant descriptions by Cheila Littleboy. Accurate enough for serious botanical study, and worthy of individual framing, the plates also teach an important lesson in the beauty inherent in all plants. Printed in Great Britain and published in this country by Thomas Yoseloff, Inc., 11 East 36 St., New York City 16, the book costs $8.50.

A Field Guide to the Ferns and their Related Families, by Boughton Cobb, is Number 10 in the Peterson Field Guide Series. Accompanying the descriptions of all species found in northeastern and central North America and the related species of Europe and the British Isles are 500 drawings by Laura Louise Foster. ### Scented foliage geraniums

We can't imagine anyone with a sunny window who wouldn't welcome a gift of the fascinating, fragrant-leaved geraniums. Varied in shape and scent, from tangy, lacy, pine-scented varieties to pungent, heart-shaped lemon and lobed, oak-leaf types, these geraniums are wonderful as pot plants and to have handy whenever foliage is needed. You can give eight different labeled varieties for $3, plants to be shipped for Christmas arrival, Wilson Brothers, Roachdale, Ind.

Clematis

Of all the summer flowers, the too-little known, large-flowered clematis might well be the most welcome gift for gardeners across the country. Available now in velvety red and blue, deep purple and white, doubles as well as singles, the new hybrids produce garlands of showy blossoms, but require little ground space. Order from color photographs in the leaflet of clematis specialists, James I. George & Son, Inc., Fairport, N.Y.

Self-watering saucers

These black plastic dishes do away with messy, unmatched exiles from the kitchen, prevent water marks on furniture, make plants almost self-sufficient: Fiber glass wick extending from saucer into bottom of flower pot draws water upward, replenishing the soil moisture as needed. Cups fit standard 4- and 5-inch (diameter at top) clay pots or any pot measuring 2 $\frac{1}{4}$  to 3 $\frac{3}{4}$  inches across bottom. Saucers with wicks are 6 for \$2.25, 12 for \$4.25; 24 for \$7.75. House Plant Corner, Oxford, Maryland.

Combination pruning shears and knife

tempered steel set in polished wood case. Shears are sturdy enough for any likely spur-of-the-moment garden trimming and training jobs. A real treasure, imported from Germany by Hoffritz Cutlery, 331 Madison Avenue, New York City; price, $7.50.

Catalogs and cold cash

For both the gardener who has everything and the novice who's not yet sure what he does want, a good nursery catalog and a fat check may be the perfect combination. For that matter, many gardeners would welcome for their winter reading just a bundle of catalogs—the kind that are loaded with clear, accurate photographs and information, detailed descriptions and suggestions on solving garden problems. Most valued are those from nurseries which specialize in one or several plants and, together, are able to offer a large selection for the connoisseur. We list here a few catalogs. For some, there's a small charge to cover printing.

Flower holder with separate cup

Guaranteed to be the most used item in any flower arranger's supply cupboard is this 3-inch needle holder, which attaches to a separate burnished brass bowl. Either part can be used alone, but together they hold everything from calendulas to candles. We show the unit as a base for a 4-foot candle. Called "Dazey In-a-Well," both holder and bowl are black inside. The price, $3.95. Dazey Manufacturing Company, 2214 Stoner Avenue, Los Angeles 14, California.

Tall Turner vases

The search for large vases heavy enough to support long-stemmed arrangements of flowering shrubs and evergreen branches ends right here. These handmade cylinders of mottled gray, brown or white ceramic are so beautifully proportioned, tall flowers seem almost to arrange themselves when placed in a vase of appropriate size. Give singly or in two's or three's, and order at least one for yourself. Ask for Turner vases, 10, 15 and 20 inches high, priced $10, $17.50 and $25. Bonniers, 605 Madison Ave., New York 22, N.Y.

For the gardener who "grows his own"

You don't need a greenhouse to appreciate these new plant-propagating aids. The streamlined trays in muted gray or pale green are watertight and handsome enough to grace a table or window sill. In fact, they might easily be used as planters or as trays for a collection of plants in pots, instead of as seed flats as was originally intended. Flats nest, are lightweight but indestructible, drainage holes are easily punched. Perma-Nest plant trays: 22 x 11 inches, 2 for $3.50; 8 x 12 inches, 3 for $1.65; 8 inches square, 3 for $1.75; 8 x 4 inches, 12 for $2.50. Trays described thus far are about 2½ inches deep. Bulb tray, 14 x 16 inches is 3½ inches deep, price $2.39. All plus 10% postage. Plastic trays from Growers Supply Co., Ann Arbor, Mich. Propagating case, an updated version of Mr. Ward's glass affair, can likewise be used for starting seeds or rooting cuttings, but has a cover to keep the air agreeably moist to promote fast rooting and prevent wilting and damaging drafts on young plants. Available from The House Plant Corner, Oxford, Maryland, the case measures 11 x 15 x 6 inches, costs $4.95, plus 45¢ postage.

Two-piece planter

Containers worthy of a gardener's finest plants are always welcome gifts. This one will especially delight the purist who insists upon drainage holes for movement of air and moisture. Wide rim on liner supports it on outer shell. Both pieces are finished in neutral, foliage flattering tones which allow texture and color of clay to show through. Two sizes: 6 inch diameter, 4 inches high, $7.50; 7½ inch diameter, 6½ inches high, $10. Bonniers, 605 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y.

REMODEL FOR TELEVISION

A luxury to be sure, but one that is becoming a necessity.

Built-in units that are conveniently located, readily accessible and concealed when not in use are most desirable.

Important, then, is to make the best possible use of space,

whether it be adding a room partition, converting

a closet or renovating a wall. Here are four examples:

EIGHT PHOTOGRAPHS BY GEORGE SMALL

This co-ordinated dining, television and sewing area near the kitchen is an ideal place for younger viewers to watch their favorite programs. Tucked under a work counter, television set is easily enjoyed from the couch or floor, and just as easily hidden from view by a sliding louvered panel, whenever the family is dining or pursuing other interests.

Further information on these rooms on page 191

To assure privacy, this family created a partition to separate the living room from the foyer. In doing so, they built in a miniature bar and a perfect niche for housing the family television set. Every spare inch of space was converted into useful shelving, and when not in use, everything is attractively closeted by louvered shutters that fold back when necessary.

Ellen Lehman McClusky, decorator.

Comfortably furnished for reading or watching television, one part of the living room offers quiet seclusion from the rest of the room. This end is designed around the television set, which was built into the corner storage wall between the bookcases and is simply hidden behind closed doors, when the family so chooses. Curtains pulled across glass wall shut out the light for day-time viewing. Cannell and Chaffin, decorators.

Here are the arguments for a factory-made, factory-assembled, plug-in-and-play radio-phonograph—a furniture instrument—as the way to good musical reproduction

A DEBATE ON

The Case for The Furniture Instrument

By R. H. G. MATHEWS

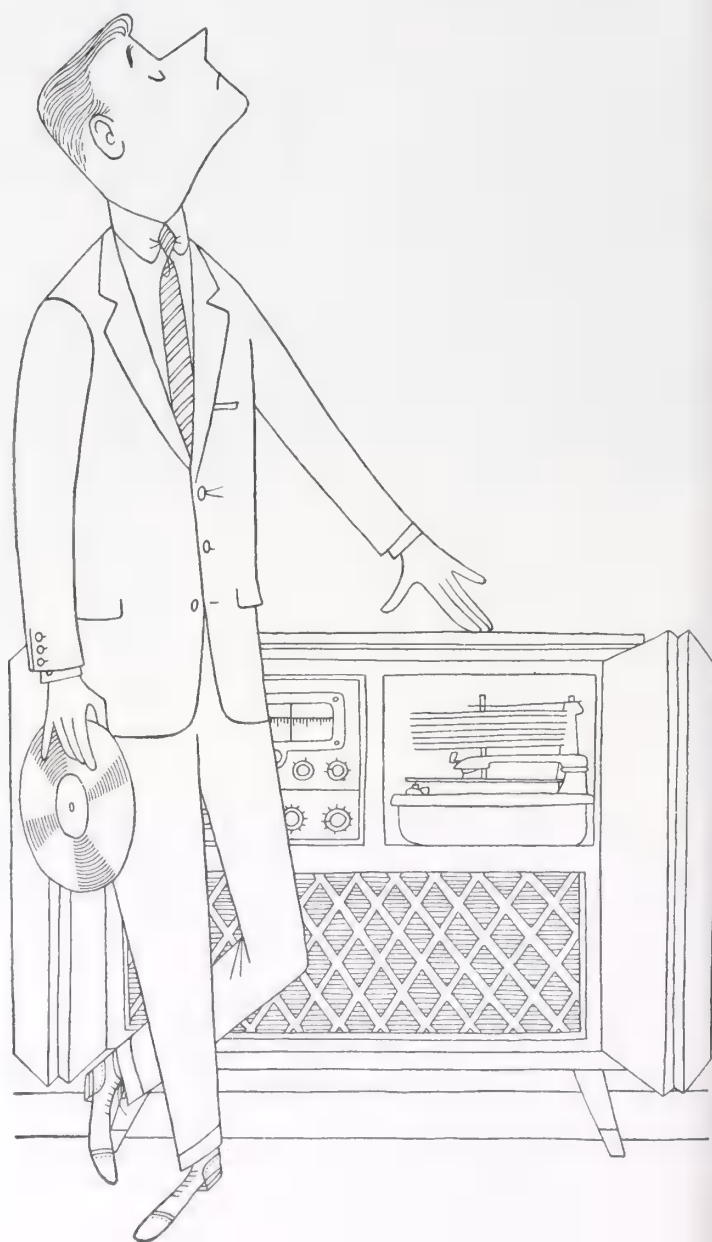

By now you've probably heard a dozen or more definitions of high fidelity. Perhaps the simplest and most practical definition is: the reproduction of everything recorded on a modern high fidelity record, without addition, subtraction or distortion.

Well-designed phonographs of years ago were high fidelity (truthful reproduction) in the sense that they faithfully reproduced everything that was recorded on the records of their day, but limitations in recording materials and techniques stood in the way of completely faithful recording of all the music of the original performance.

It's a different story today. Today's modern recording techniques and materials have made it possible to record music on records almost exactly as it was originally played. Certainly, high fidelity is nothing to joke about, either in terms of public interest or in the securing of perfect or near-perfect reproduction of beautiful music. Unfortunately, many people who know little about the subject of electronics, and even less about the subject of acoustics, are buying all kinds of units and systems with matched or unmatched components, and because they're not engineers, they frequently invest considerable money in systems that they not only do not want, but do not need and which, in many cases, do not give them the results they are trying to attain.

The difficulty is that the "hi-fi" craze has got somewhat out of hand. The love of music is a very basic human emotion and most of us are seeking for perfection of musical reproduction, but in every neighborhood there seems to be a friend or neighbor who has turned to hi-fi as a hobby.

Please believe me, I am not in any way attempting to deprecate a hobby as such, but the hobbyist's aims are usually completely different from those of the general public who are looking for beautiful music. The sound hobbyist, a hi-fi fan, in many cases, is an amateur sound scientist, an individual who is searching for performance of sound beyond that which has already been created—new and (Please turn to page 195)

HIGH FIDELITY

And here are the arguments for a selection of individual components, assembled by you at home—a hi-fi system—as the better way to achieve the best in musical listening

The Case for The Hi-Fi System

By LAWRENCE LEKASHMAN

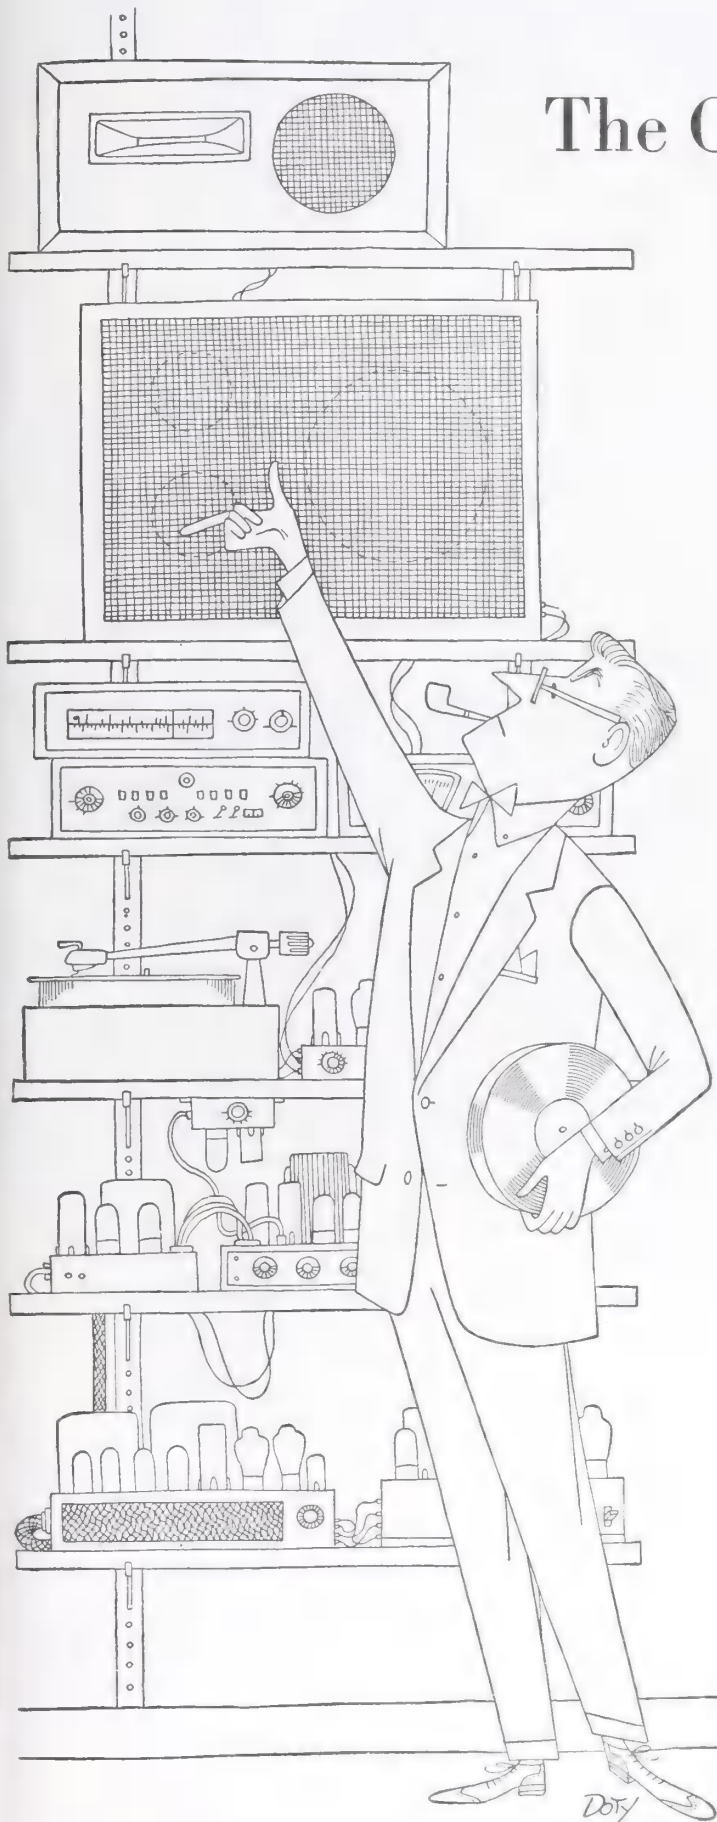

If you have ever experienced the concert-hall quality of the music you can hear through a modern, high-fidelity sound system, then you don't have to read any further. You know there is no better way to enjoy the ever wider world of music so skillfully recorded on today's records and tapes or sent to you over FM airwaves.

However, if you have not yet had this experience, you should open your mind, and your ears, to it. Once you've made the test (and if you like fine music), you'll never want to go back to the average home radio-phonograph. You'll be forever dissatisfied until you too have a system at home that will open this world to you in all its true beauty and realistic wonder.

Let me say right off that there is a certain convenience in going out and buying one of the good and very expensive radio-phonographs now available. And perhaps, even after you compare it with the kind of sound that a far less expensive high-fidelity component system can give you, you will choose it because it relieves you of any problems of selecting various components and placing them properly in your living room or elsewhere. (There are competent advisors on this in good music shops, remember. And there is an advantage in being able to put the components where you want them and where they'll be most convenient and sound best. We'll return to this later.)

However, if you are the kind of person who prefers exercising his own taste in, say, the selection of furniture for the living room and chooses each piece individually rather than buying a "complete 7-piece suite," then you will welcome the individuality of choice that a hi-fi system offers you.

When you select your amplifier, record player, loud speaker, FM-AM radio tuner, and later, if you want, a tape recorder, you will be satisfying your listening taste exactly as you desire and achieving a perfection of performance that no other set may offer you. At the same time, you will have far better sound for far less money. For about $250 you can bring a new dimension of musical listen- (Please turn to page 202)

LITTLE LUXURIES THEY MIGHTN'T

PHOTOGRAPHS BY ROLF TEITGENS

A lovely low chest for jewelry, silver or what not is a gift that will forever speak quietly of your affection and taste. It is finished in ember glow on solid pecan wood with inlays of butternut and Tamo veneers. There are many similar chests. This one: $79.50 at Lord & Taylor, New York.

For your gourmet friends on the go there is a delightful way to introduce them to these savory, convenient packages of Knorr-Swiss soup mixes, enjoyable anywhere there's hot water. Accompany a sampling with a fine Wedgwood tureen ($10.25, B. Altman & Co., N.Y.) and the whole thing becomes an unusual gift. Soup mixes are 29¢ each everywhere.

Haven't you passed a shop lately, looked into the window and silently wished that someone would buy you a little luxury item you saw there, one you would never, never (well, hardly ever) buy for yourself? Sure you have! Why not buy it for your friend this very Christmas? For someone who daydreams, like you, in front of antique shops and rare places. We've done it, too, and here's what we've found. May it all nudge you along toward that wonderful freeing of the imagination which alone results in those wonderfully imaginative gifts we too rarely receive.

GIVE THEMSELVES

Cocktails for three—for you and a young couple you know, perhaps. The glasses have a silver metal luster overlay with a tiny snowflake pattern ($3.40 each). Martini mixer (available at $9.95) makes an elegant occasion of a daily ritual. Marshall Field's, Chicago.

More ideas on the next two pages

Apothecary jars today, filled with English sweets; tomorrow, after they are emptied, they can easily become a row of handsome, useful containers for the kitchen in which to keep sugar, flour and the like. These Cresca jars are $2.95 each, Charles & Co., New York.

Little luxuries they mightn't give themselves continued

A little necessity of a luxury is this gift for the person who likes wine, but has no wine cellar to keep the bottles properly horizontal. This little steel wine rack ($21.95 at Bloomingdale's, N.Y.) does just that.

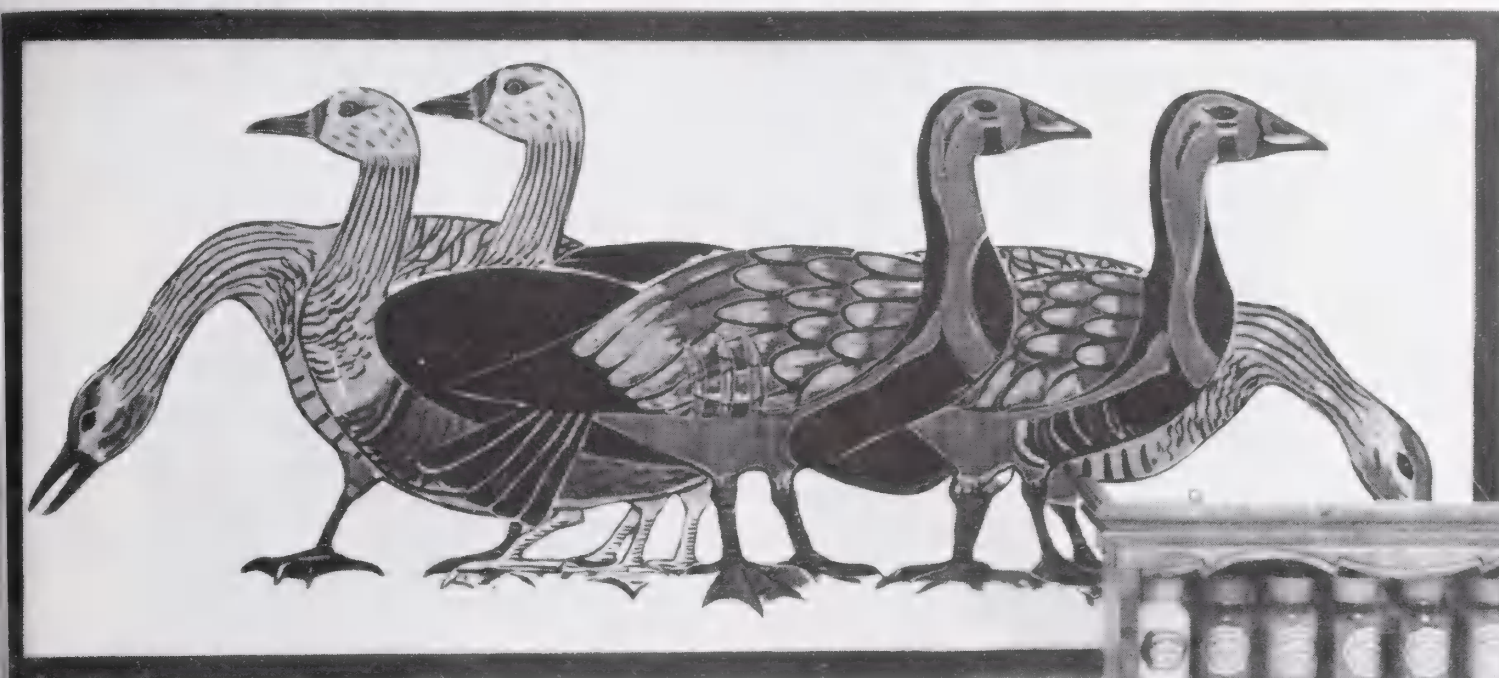

A comforting thought is this gift of a comforter, a little luxury of a necessity for coolish weather. Dacron filled, covered with white embossed nylon, it's washable. 72" by 84", comforter costs about $24.95, at McCutcheon's, New York.

I love you! says this pillow in gold damask, so softly that only your ear can hear it, your eye see it. Fabric costs $9 per yard, through your decorator, at Patterson Fabrics, Inc., New York.

Linen place mats by Tammis Keefe are a good buy at $5.95, for they come in a set of 4 along with 4 napkins, printed white on white, or on misty turquoise, gold or pink. Lord & Taylor, New York.

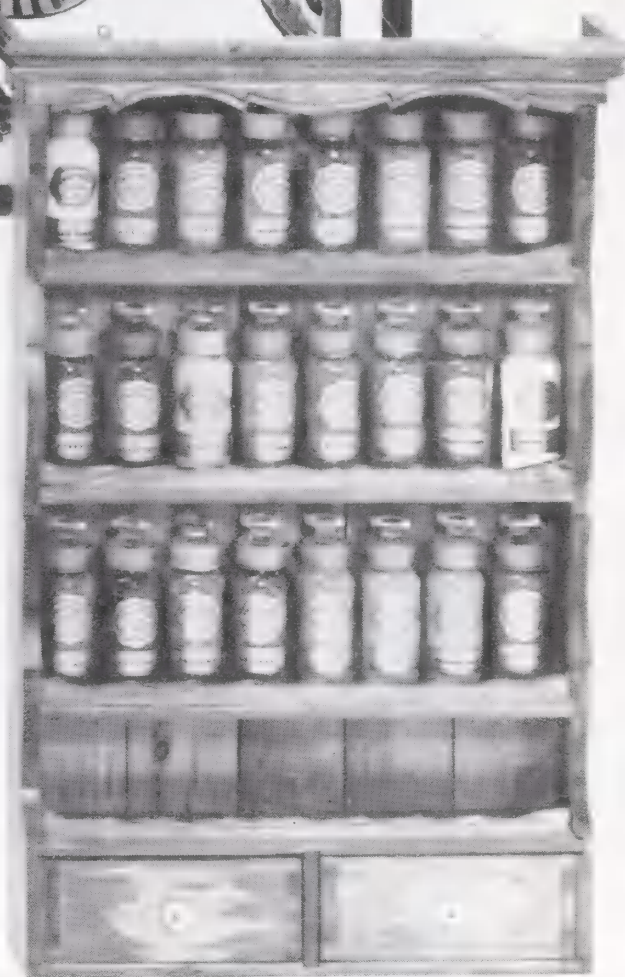

Inspired by an Egyptian tomb painting, this gaggle of geese printed on white linen is a far cry from the usual art present. 50" fabric, it costs $9 per yard through your decorator at Jofa, Inc., New York. Quilting was $6; framing, $15.

For the indoor man or woman who has never enjoyed outdoor cooking, this complete barbecue set of Trader Vic, $7.95 at Abraham & Straus, Brooklyn, N.Y. It contains the best barbecue glaze we know, also a Sate Sauce for shish kabob and a fine cookbook.

Spice is the variety of life. And here is a handy, hand-rubbed spice cabinet with 24 handsome apothecary jars of Twin Tree Gardens herbs, which should start one on the road to life's variety. $50, B. Altman & Co., N.Y.

Light their eyes this Christmas

and keep them lighted all year round with the warmth and wonder of family traditions

By THELMA S. DOUGLAS

Now that Christmas is here, let us think of the beauty of building family traditions that will last through our lifetime and go on perhaps for generations. Let us think long about the imagination, love and unity which go into the ritual-like procedures that families build up year after year in daily routines and on special occasions.

First, let us consider children's bedtime rituals. These may include prayers, a story, a family song before youngsters go to their bedrooms, a quiet game to hasten them off, or a lullaby the last thing before saying "good-night."

When one of our children was a tiny baby, I began to sing part of the Brahms' lullaby to him as I tucked him into bed. He didn't know what the words meant, I'm sure, but he soon learned to know that the song was the signal to stop playing and to go to sleep.

Some families have a little ceremony for waking their members and keeping them in a cheerful mood each morning with records. This custom presupposes that at least one member of the family has enough pep to get up and start the record-player playing "Good Morning, Mary Sunshine," "Lazy Mary, Will You Get Up?", or "Oh, What a Beautiful Morning!" Records may be continued while the beds are being made and pajamas are being hung up, but we have preferred to use singing games, often ones that we make up together.

One of these original games which we used for a long time centered around the Pick-up Fairy. This fairy would appear in the child's room only if Mother and Daddy were in another room. All that the parents could hear was the humming of the fairy as things were quickly picked up and put away. Then one of the children would sing out, "Come see what the Pick-up Fairy has done." And we would all hurry into the room and be surprised to find that it more than passed our routine inspection.

Inspection, by the way, is another device. Younger children who have not attended summer camps are often pleased to have their rooms "inspected" by the older children who have been at camp, or by parents. It is amazing the amount of work children are willing to do if it is fun, and almost anything the family does together, cheerfully, is fun. We have discovered that the responsibilities which a child assumes in his early years become a habit, something which he performs in later years with little effort or argument.

Grace at table is another family tradition, one that should not be left entirely to the children. We like to have each member of the family responsible for this prayer of gratitude on one day of each week. Since there are six of us, that leaves Sunday for the saying in unison of The Lord's Prayer, the prayer of St. Francis of Assisi, etc. Some families always say or sing some sort of mealtime blessing together.

We could spend a great deal of time discussing family councils, family work projects, picnics and vacations, all of which might be included under the title of family traditions. But it is the subject of family holiday customs that we want to stress primarily.

It is these holidays that I remember from my own childhood and always with a feeling of inner warmth and joy. There were years when we didn't have much money, but we were always able to cut out heart-shaped cookies for Valentine's Day and to make beautiful May baskets out of tissue paper and cardboard. We found some other way of making a special occasion of each holiday as it came along.

Lack of money need not be a deterrent to establishing family traditions. Neither does a lack of interest in one member of the family need to hold back the rest of the family. Of course it is more fun when everyone takes an active interest in it, but think of the many happy Christmas celebrations that take place over and over in spite of the warnings by the head of the house (Please turn to page 137)

Have fun at home this happy season by putting on your own film festival. Entertain your family and friends with a sparkling selection of 16mm movies

FIVE WONDERFUL FILM SHOWS

By CECILE STARR House BEAUTIFUL's Home Movie Editor

If you're planning to gather with friends and family this holiday, let films be a part of your good times at home. Brighten the season with such fine performers and film-makers as Alec Guinness, Maurice Evans, René Clair, Norman McLaren, the UPA group and other film talents whose names may not yet be familiar to you. Evening parties for the grown-ups, or afternoon parties for children, can be immeasurably enlivened by one of these entertaining films.

With this in mind I've selected five programs of joyful motion pictures for you to show on your own 16mm sound projector—or on a rented projector from the NAVA dealer or camera supply store listed in your telephone book. I've done the previewing and selecting, and I've written down all the information I think you'll need, but you'll have to do the selecting. And you'd best hop to it and send your rental order right away—or you'll be left with second choice, or less, when your party date rolls around.

To make sure that everything goes off well, there are a few pointers to bear in mind before and during the showing:

1. Have spare projector bulbs and exciter lamps on hand, just in case the regular one blows out.
2. Drape the wires that connect to the loud-speaker and electrical outlet behind chairs, along walls and out of the aisle. Remember, too, that an unkinked wire is safest in every respect.
3. Seat the early arrivals in the center, rather than along the aisles, so that late-comers can sit down with a minimum of disruption.

4. Say a few words about the film before it begins—who made it, when it was made, how long it is, whether or not there will be an interruption for reels to be changed—not a speech, but a simple message introducing the film to the audience for its best attention and enjoyment. They'll get more out of it.

And now, on with the holiday show. These are all good programs; choose the one that is best for you.

I. Good for the Children

If you want to get far away from the sort of thing that is generally offered as children's television fare, try the combination of Norman McLaren's fast-moving short called Two Bagatelles (three minutes, color) with Joseph Krumgold's quiet and sensitive And Now Miguel (63 minutes). In this case, I'd run the feature film first and put on the short at the end of the program.

And Now Miguel is the story of a New Mexico boy who wishes to be grown-up so that he can go with the men of his family to herd sheep in the mountains. In the process of getting his wish, he runs into many boyhood difficulties. Since the film is quite slow-paced, you might do well to tell the children that it's the story of a real boy and a real family and a real sheep ranch—so they won't be expecting a lot of fictional theatrics. Recommended age level: eight to fourteen.

Two Bagatelles is a nonsense item of speeded-up stop-motion shots of a man climbing a ladder, ice-skating on the lawn and doing an eccentric jig. The dancing titles at the beginning and end of the film are particularly wonderful—and you might decide to run the film a second time. (I did and we all enjoyed it very much indeed.)

Both films are available for rental from Contemporary Films at 13 East 37th Street, New York 16, New York. Rental price for Two Bagatelles is $5. And Now Miguel rents at $15; you may also be able to obtain it at your near-by university film library or possibly in your community's public library.

As an alternative program for the youngsters in your family, you may want to try one of the world-famous British adventure films for children. There are nine in the series currently available here and they range in length from 30 minutes to 70 minutes. All were produced under the supervision of Miss Mary Field, Britain's renowned exponent of the philosophy that excitement, merri-ment and suspense belong in children's films.

Bush Country Adventure (58 minutes) is a charming story of five Australian ranch children—one an aborigine—who track down a bunch of horse thieves during Christmas holidays, which is mid-summer "down under." Rental is $17.50. Austria is the real setting for The Mysterious Poacher (50 minutes) another mystery in which a group of school children help capture a deer thief who has been poaching on the game reservation. Dialogue is in German with English sub-titles; children who can read easily will have no difficulty in following the printed words, and the story is so action-laden that it tells itself quite well in pictures. Rental is $15. Others in this series are Circus Boy (51 minutes, rental $15); Fortune Lane (58 minutes, rental $15), about a boy and a locomotive; Johnny on the Run (70 minutes, rental $20), about the adventures of a run-away Polish (Please turn to page 172)

Here are six stills of six 16mm masterpieces that you can show at home: Running from far left to right: little Joey in the Little Fugitive; René Clair's incomparable A Nous La Liberté; Helen Keller in Her Story; down-under Bush Country Adventure; Maurice Evans and Robert Morley in Gilbert and Sullivan; and Ford's The American Road.

There is an age, known as childhood, when everything in life has wonder, excitement and the joy of discovery. And often, when it has been encouraged in childhood by parents, it continues throughout one's life, filling it forever with the same awareness of life's wonders.

Children make mud-pies. Why not real ones? Boys and girls play house, as realistically as they know how. Why not help them? Here are tools that are toys—toys that are tools for the imaginative mind of growing, curious, knowledge-seeking children.

Life is a joy for the children pictured on these pages, because it is full of the pleasure known by the wisest of men—the pleasure of learning, the pleasure of knowing. It is the supreme key to the greatest of womanly arts: keeping house and family happy. It is the way of a man with a happy wife: appreciating (Please turn to page 194) war orphan; Jean's Plan (32 minutes, rental $7.50), about a girl who helps her father, a jeweler, trick a gang of would-be diamond thieves. This group of films is available for rental from United World Films, 1445 Park Avenue, New York 29, New York. They can also be booked through Contemporary Films, at the address given above.

II. Good for the whole family

Young and old will find true delight in the captivating Little Fugitive (75 minutes), in which seven-year-old Richie Andrusco plays the part of a boy named Joey who flees to Coney Island after a fight with his older brother. Joey's adventures, such as the episode where he is trying to hit a mechanically thrown baseball in a test-of-skill concession are genuinely funny, and the film has a naturalness which has won praise for it all over the world. It's a gem among small, non-studio productions, written and directed by Ray Ashley Morris Engel and Ruth Orkin—the latter two a husband-and-wife team of professional still photographers. This was their first motion picture

You'll also enjoy the film's musical score, composed and performed by Eddy Manson on solo harmonica.

As an accompanying short, I'd choose UPA's Madeline, based on the Bemelmans' book—or one of their Mr. Magoo or Gerald McBoing Boing cartoons. All are available from Cinema Guild at 10 Fiske Place, Mount Vernon, New York (or from Audio Film Center in San Francisco at 522 Clement Street—or in Chicago at 2209 East 75th Street). Rental for the UPA shorts is $5 each. They run about ten minutes and are in Technicolor. Little Fugitive rents at a basic fee of $45, but you might ask if there are special rates for home use.

A feature film suitable for all the family is the Technicolor feature Gilbert and Sullivan (112 minutes) starring Maurice Evans and Robert Morley in the title roles. Tuneful excerpts from many of their famous operettas are included. Rental is listed at $45—and the film is also available from the Cinema Guild and Audio Film Center at the addresses mentioned above. From this source too, and newly released for 16mm use, is the outstanding British film Breaking the Sound Barrier (110 minutes) which older children would surely enjoy. A jet-age adventure starring Ralph Richardson and Ann Todd, rental is $25.

III. Good for Laughs

One of the world's all-time great comedies has just been released for 16mm use, so any film-lover can have it whenever the occasion for cinematic merriment arises. The film is René Clair's A Nous La Liberté (87 minutes). It is an early French cinema with a maximum of picture-language. There are English sub-titles, but even without them the film would be enormously entertaining to anyone who enjoys the utmost in film wit. This is René Clair at his unbeatable best, a film which will never show its age. I don't want to start an argument by saying this is René Clair's best film—that it is one of the ten best films of all time, as many proponents might gladly do, but I will say it's foolish of you to pass up this chance to see movie comedy at its finest. It is an utterly funny film. Credits go to René Clair for script and direction, to Georges Krinal for photography, to Lazare Leerson for sets and designs, to Georges Auric for music, and to Raymond Cordy and Henri Marand as Louis and Emile, two gentlemen of fortune, ex-convicts, you must know, who reach the heights and depths of success in the business world. Rental for A Nous La Liberté is $50, but there are special rates for home showings. You won't need an accompanying short to go with it. Rentals should be made with Contemporary Films, 13 East 37th Street, New York 16, N. Y.

As an alternative for adult comedy fare, see Alec Guinness and Celia Johnson in The Captain's Paradise—if you haven't already done so. It's 80 minutes long and rents at $25 from Cinema Guild, 10 Fiske Place, Mount Vernon, New York (and the Audio Film Centers in San Francisco and Chicago whose addresses are given above). An accompanying UPA short would be perfectly in order, it seems to me.

IV. Good for the Soul

It is not easy to urge you to see Helen Keller in Her Story—because, until you have already seen it, you cannot possibly understand my enthusiasm. You've probably heard of Helen Keller all your life, seen her in the newsreels, read articles about her and by her. This 45-minute feature documentary, which incidentally won an Academy Award this year, is considerably more impressive than anything you may already have seen or read. It gives you glimpses into the life of a beautiful child left blind and deaf by early illness, who escaped from this isolation to become one of the most active and alert women of our times, an ardent spokesman for all handicapped people, a leading world figure devoted to life and the wonders of living. To us it may seem a small miracle that this child, after years of total isolation, could in so short a time learn to write not only letters and words but thoughts and communications of joyous interest to the world. With the patient aid of her teacher, Anne Sullivan, Helen learned to read English as well as half a dozen other languages.

Now, as one of the most-travelled and best-informed people of our time, Helen Keller lives in the Connecticut home built for her by some of her friends. Awake at five in the morning, she begins each day by reading from the Bible. After breakfast and a walk outdoors along the specially built handrail, Helen Keller and her secretary-companion, Polly Thompson, read and answer the mail (Miss Keller types her own letters), work on articles and special projects, do their own housework, receive friends and guests. And for Helen the day ends as it begins, with a reading from the Bible.

He who sees this film will find his own message in it, his own spiritual elevation. For me the most important idea in the film is, in Helen Keller's words, that "Everyone has his own handicap—it just happens to be the handicap of the blind that they cannot see and the handicap of the deaf that they cannot hear."

Helen Keller in Her Story was produced by Nancy Hamilton. The narration is read by Katherine Cornell. In addition, such noted people as Martha Graham, Gladys Swarthout, President Eisenhower and many others appear in the film. Despite its Academy Award, it has been seen in only a few theaters around the country. On the right occasion for you at home, this could be the most memorable Christmas-time event for family and friends. The film is available for 16mm rental from Louis de Rochemont Associates, 13 East 37th Street, New York 16, N. Y. Rental for the 45-minute film is a mere $12.50. You'll be interested to learn that earnings on the film go to Miss Keller's special Fund for World Services. And here's a suggestion: If your church or club is looking for a suitable holiday program, tell them about this one—only good can come of it.

A wonderful accompaniment to the Helen Keller film is the charming British short, Sunday by the Sea—a lovely joy-of-living tid-bit about youngsters, and even oldsters, having an awfully good time in candid photography style. There is no narration, merely old-time music-hall ballads that will warm your heart. It's 15 minutes long, rents for $7.50, and is available from Contemporary Films, 13 East 37th Street, New York 16, N. Y. The address of the two film libraries is the same, you will notice, and you may order both films from either one. The films will arrive together, but billing will probably be made separately.

V. Good for the Pocketbook

For little or nothing in the way of cash outlay, you can get hold of some unusually attractive and interesting travel films for home showing. One group that I can recommend is the Pan American World Airways series of half-hour color tours. The best and most recent take you to Germany, Austria, Italy, Vikingland, Alaska, and France. They are available from Ideal Pictures, 65 E. South Water Street, Chicago 1, Illinois. A service charge of $2.50 is all you have to pay for each of the films.

From the Ford Film Library a number of outstanding films are available without charge. The big problem is that they are extremely popular and are usually booked far in advance. In their free catalog of 16mm titles, you'll find films on the automotive industry (of which I think you'll particularly enjoy The American Road (43 minutes) and Technique for Tomorrow (23 minutes)—which deal respectively with the history of the automobile and new trends in production by automation. Among the travel films you'll enjoy Highway by the Sea (15 minutes), a tour of the Pacific coastal area, and Yellowstone (20 minutes) both are in color. For a complete listing, and to place your request for the films you want to see, write to Film Library, Ford Motor Company, 16400 Michigan Avenue, Dearborn, Michigan.

are the finest pocket guides to wild plants we've met. Tree Finder is 25¢ a single copy, 20¢ if you buy ten copies or more. Flower Finder, 50¢, or 40¢ each for ten copies or more.

For the serious gardener intent upon learning the very best ways to grow plants, we suggest The Pruning Manual by Everett P. Christopher. The most definitive book in its field, it tells why, as well as how, all temperate zone plants are pruned. Published by Macmillan, 60 Fifth Ave., New York City. $5.

MAIL-ORDER FOOD BUYING

ing horizon in food is having a powerful cultural impact on the eating habits of our people. For it is changing us from one of the most provincial countries, gastronomically, into one of the most sophisticated. It is having as much cultural effect as the book-of-the-month-by-mail idea and the newer long-playing-record-by-mail notion.

JUST as the record clubs have turned even a rural mail box into a music store, so the mail box is as important and even more promising than the corner grocery store. Even the city sophisticate, who theoretically "has everything," must order by mail to get certain old-fashioned country recipes and the fine produce which is too perishable to go through the normal wholesale channels. Then, too, the city dweller does not want to take the time to traipse all over a big city for those foreign specialties which are for sale but at widely separate points.

Time-saving is one of the biggest motivations in this kind of buying, ranking almost equal with the appeal of quality. For it takes less time to write a letter than to drive somewhere in your car and fight for a parking space. And mail ordering has the added attraction that the item is delivered to your door—by the mail man or the express man.

The housewifely fixation that it is necessary to pick it out yourself in order to be sure of getting quality does not apply here, for superb quality is the raison d'être of this type of business. The mail-order merchant knows that unless his customers are pleased enough to reorder he is finished. You may not like it, but it will be for some other reason than intrinsic quality.

If you are wondering how such a big industry could grow up and its magnitude be unreported by even the business press, it is entirely possible in a country as vast as ours. For America is, contrary to popular belief, one of the most under-reported countries in the world, simply because new areas of activity open up and grow to boom dimensions before most of us have even been alerted to look in those directions. In this case of mail-order food buying the news sleuths have been put off by the statistics about supermarket sales that leap from any newspaper or trade paper. These statistics are so fantastic, even to Americans hardened to stories of expansion, that no one seems to have thought to look somewhere else.

Another aid to this unheralded boom is the fact that many of the mail-order food houses do no advertising, finding all the customers they can handle through the personal referrals of older, satisfied customers. Old, well-established firms, like Sey-Co and San Marino Preserving Kitchen, doing yearly volumes in six figures, have built their entire clientele by these cozy, personal methods.

Many firms credit their expansion to the fact that they started by specializing in gift baskets. In this way they would get from one customer the names of from 10 to 100 new prospects who would actually be sampling their wares, and to whom they would mail next season's catalog. The mathematical possibilities for growth in such a sampling program are truly staggering, as events have proved. But the old, satisfied customer who reorders year after year is the backbone of the business and the goal of every firm.

What are some of these items that sell so well by mail?

Stone-ground flours are one of the biggest classifications. Smoked meats, done by old-fashioned methods, are a close second. Jams, jellies and pickles made by old-fashioned home recipes are booming classifications. One of the biggest operators says that he believes the leading motivation of his customers is to recapture the taste of something their mothers or grandmothers made.

BUT IT is hard to generalize too closely, for almost anything that is exceptionally good succeeds. Novelty is a big factor, for the fun of tasting something new is being discovered by millions of Americans. (Twenty or thirty years ago the average American didn't want to taste new things.)

For instance, have you ever tasted tangelos, a cross between grapefruit and tangerines? Or Smak, a subtly smoked fish spread? Or guava shells? Or pancakes made of wild rice flour? Or curried walnuts? Or quail eggs? Or almond paste pretzels? Or cucumber marmalade. Or wild beach plum jelly? Or smoked kingfish? Or almond butter (like peanut butter only made with almonds)? Or mountain wild blackberry syrup? Or eucalyptus honey? Or apple syrup that tastes like the blossom rather than the fruit? If you haven't, you could—that is if you know where to write for them!

MAIL-ORDER FOOD BUYING

Novelty is probably what starts a family in the mail ordering of food. But it is not likely to be the main consideration once they get the hang of this new world. When they discover that the best consommé, or the best pork and beans, or the best canned peaches are to be bought from a mail-order specialist they begin to order these staples by the case. And they are well on their way to doing a sizable portion of their provisioning this way, reaching out in all directions to cull the very best from everywhere.

AS YOU can imagine, price is not the primary consideration in this kind of food buying. People who shop this way are ready to pay a little more, for it is intrinsic quality they are after. Or else it is that old-fashioned, homemade flavor they hanker for so strongly that they would go without something else in order to afford it.

"If we forget about quality we're dead," says Elijah Trumbull of Rose Mill which features stone-ground flours and New England recipes. "Mail-order customers can't come in to browse around, as they might in a store. It's easy for them to order once, but it's even easier to stop reordering unless our products completely please them."

Premium quality has been the cornerstone of S. S. Pierce, a 125-year-old grocery firm in Boston, long famous for their fine private label canned goods. (They also sell through selected specialty shops, as well as mail order.) Typical of their insistence on quality is this story:

"One of our top products has been genuine mocha and java coffee," said an S. S. Pierce executive. "But for a long time we discontinued this blend because the coffee obtainable was not of the quality that measured up to our standards. Orders were constantly refused. But we filed them so we might notify these customers if and when S. S. Pierce mocha and java ever came back—as it now has."

Anybody can buy chipped beef at a corner meat market, but this has absolutely no taste relationship with the dried beef made by the Hilders at their Jugtown Mountain Smokehouse. They cut their own sassafras to smoke the choicest available corn-fed western beef out of which they make beef slices so paper thin and moist, so fragrantly smoked that you're ready to re-order after the first taste.

Hickory Valley Farms produces an old-fashioned, smoked link sausage that is super-size and made from the leanest of all pork cuts. They can convert breakfast into a gourmet delight.

Harrington's cures its Canadian bacon with Vermont maple sugar which gives it a uniquely flavorful taste.

Only 15 out of a hundred hams grade high enough for Jordan's Smokehouse and they salt them for 45 days, age for a year, de-bone some of them for easy slicing, if you request it, cook them in wine and sugar and the succulence is special, so rich that they should be sliced paper thin.

Take Braunschweiger, a smoked liverwurst that anybody can buy in almost any delicatessen. Why mail-order for it? Because Forst's Cat-skill Mountain Smokehouse makes it better, so much better with just the proper spicing that the natural flavor is not overwhelmed. They make it with the same complete care that they give to their smoked hams and smoked turkeys and that's why they've built up a mail-order business of 250,000 mail-order customers.

Franzenburg's Wolf Creek Smokehouse in Iowa also produces elite hams. "Meats like ours take individual care and each must be treated like an individual," said Paul Franzenburg, Jr. "You can't mass-produce hickory-smoked meats and hope to maintain the standard that we require of each piece of meat before it leaves our smokehouse. Each must be slow-cured, just so, in its own juices and mellowed in a modern, old-fashioned smokehouse where it slowly cures above smoking hickory ashes." (Then Franzenburg adds a clove and sugar dressing to melt into the lean meat, covers it all with a light clove-flavored gelatin to seal in flavor.) Also available: a smoked suckling pig.

FOR THE ham connoisseur who likes Kentucky methods there's the Ellis Henry ham from old Hickory Farm, Oldham County, Kentucky. The Henrys smoke only a few hundred hams a year—no brine, no chemicals, no artificial preservatives. The Henrys rub down the hams with spices, bed them thick in salt, hang them for months in the dense smoke of hickory chips, and two frosty autumns later the mahogany-hued ham is ready for cooking. It's a ham to be sliced paper thin—its savor coming close to the Westphalian or Prosciutto.

The Smithfield Ham & Products Co., Inc. sells nationally both to selected specialty shops as well as mail-order. (Pinesbridge Farm, S. S. Pierce, Charles & Co. sell similarly.) Smithfield also keeps its quality intact by limiting ham production to 10,000 a year to guarantee each ham maximum attention. The Henrys use cornfed porkers, but Smithfield prefers its pigs peanut-fed; the taste decision is your own. The 200-year-old Smithfield method includes dry-salting, spicing and heavy smoking with hickory, apple and oak woods, all of which takes some 65 days before the year-long aging starts. Not only has Smithfield increased its mail-order business several thousand per cent since the end of the second World War, but last year alone they mail-shipped over 550,000 pounds of food.

One of their many quality canned items is Brunswick Stew, a heat-and-eat meal based on a Colonial recipe. A housewife trying to duplicate the special full-bodied homemade flavor would have to spend hours simmering the eight vegetables called for in the complicated recipe in an open kettle. This is a stew thick, gusty and delicious.

Let's not forget about fancy game fowl—the wild strain pheasants of Pinesbridge Farm, the smoked Cornish hen and duck of Fin 'N' Feather, the chukker partridge and mallard ducks of Yocum Game Farms—all subtly smoked, meaty, wild without being gamy, tender and succulent. All of these Farms raise wild strain game birds on a controlled basis to get more meat that still has some of the wild game flavor.

What about fresh meat? What's the sense of buying fresh meat by mail? Is it better?

BY MAIL you can order top prime meat of a quality that's hard to come by from the local butcher (simply because he doesn't have it or not enough of it). Pfaelzer Brothers Inc. in Chicago's Union Stockyards sells by mail the kind of premium quality aged meat usually found only in first-class hotels and the finest restaurants. This is cut meat without waste, that can come straight from your freezer to the stove without needing a knife's touch or trim. It's meat scientifically dry-aged to enhance its flavor and tenderness and an aid in shrinkless cooking, providing a greater yield. Whether it's a rib roast or a boneless strip sirloin steak (only 16 such steaks are available from a 1,000 pound steer), it arrives fully guaranteed, packed in dry ice, on the date specified, with a letter announcing exact arrival. Minimum order: 50 pounds. As Pfaelzer says, "It's not the price per pound that counts, it's the cost per portion."

WHAT CAKE is more common than pound cake? So why should Old Denmark, a shop in New York, sell 500 of them a week, one third of them by mail? The answer is that each cake has a half pound of Danish butter—a type whose special excellence is recognized by the epicure. This butter content creates a cake exceptional enough to require slow, highly appreciative, most meditative munching. Also available: the widest variety of Danish cheeses, all of them aged a minimum of two years before arrival here. Some 80 other Danish items include an excellent Danish pâté with different flavors and at half the cost of the French pâté. For a small shop, Old Denmark does an amazing $140,000 mail-order business.

And flour. Why would anybody in the world want to buy flour by mail? One reason is explained in a medical book called "Clinical Nutrition" by Joliffe, Tisdale and Cannon (Hoebner Inc.), which explains that since the introduction of the patented milling process most of the germ and bran shorts have been removed from the flour, rendering it much less susceptible to weevils and spoilage, but also causing the removal of essential elements: about 90 per cent of the thiamine and 70 to 85 per cent of the riboflavin, niacin and iron, all vital to health. Flour ground the old-fashioned way does not have this deficiency.

All over the country now there are dozens of places such as Rose Mill and Great Valley Mills and Vermont Country Store filling mail orders for stone-ground flours of all kinds. Great Valley Mills have a variety of exceptional mixes of stone-ground flour for pancakes, muffins, waffles including a delectable one made of toasted cornmeal.

"What we are trying to do in mail order," said Vrest Orton of Vermont Country Store, "is to introduce gourmets to something they had never before considered a (Please turn the page) proper subject for their consideration: that fresh, natural whole grains are the proper subject for gourmet cooking not only because they are intrinsically good, but because they have a genuine and full-bodied taste.

"After all, the basic principle behind mail-order buying of food is to draw out the best from the past and apply it to the present. This is the only principle upon which intelligent men can live. If we ignore the past, we are as silly as those who stupidly and slavishly follow it blindly. But unless we apply the past good to our present needs, it's useless."

Orton's own merging of past good with present needs is a prepared bread mix made of rich, nutty, 100 per cent high protein, stone-ground wheat flour which cuts breadmaking time from an overnight job to 75 minutes, with quality high and constant.

Great Valley Mills similarly produced an excellent bread mix as well as a rice or whole wheat ready-mix for pancakes, waffles, muffins. They've also got some pure unbolted whole dark buckwheat with delicious flavor. Other Great Valley Mills unusually good recipes, rooted in the past: a Dutch corn relish that gives a zip to any meal; country smoked sausages made from prime cuts with a minimum of fat that taste as if they come right from the farm, which they do; old-fashioned relishes and preserves, peach and apple butter and chili sauce—all regional recipes that date back to the past.

AND WHY should anybody buy cheese by mail? Buy some from The Swiss Colony and find out. Try their creamy Port du Salut, shelf-cured in their own cellars until the perfection is peak. (They cut away and trim the outer edges, then wrap them in foil.) How good are they? Swiss Colony already has some 300,000 customers, last year did a gross business of $2,000,000. Or the cheddar cheese from Tillamook County Creamery Association in Oregon, made from the richest raw milk with the sharp pungency that comes only from natural aging. Their yearly sales now run about 11 million pounds. And Great Valley Mills has a regional Pennsylvania Dutch cheese, mild as Muenster, but with the consistency of a soft Camembert.

almost affectionate care.

"Some people wonder why we don't use 200-gallon pots to make our jellies, since our business rates it," said William Coolidge of Kettle Cove Industries. "But the point is, we wouldn't know how to keep our quality intact with 200-gallon pots."

NEVER KNOWN before on land or sea and certainly never before possible except with twentieth-century American transportation is the mail-ordering of Maine lobsters, shipped live and kicking, packed in rockweed inside large tins which are in turn encased in ice within a wooden barrel. You order by mail, stipulating the day of arrival. You never handle the lobsters but merely pinch a few holes in the top of the tin in which they come, add some water, set over the fire. Several firms have become famous for these mail-ordered sea foods, among them Salt Water Farm and Cap'n's Corner—both in Maine.

Don't get the idea that the only way to get such foods is by ordering through the mails. Many of the suppliers do a regular retail business in shops on the main streets of our biggest cities. But what you may not guess, when you pass their display windows, is that a tremendous portion of their volume of sales is with customers they never see.

In fact, the boom in quality and novelty foods has grown to the point where it is organized Big Business. One example of this is the service known as "Telefood." It is a coast-to-coast network of 500 stores which handle each others telegraphed orders for gift foods. It operates very much like the Florists Telegraph Delivery.

You, for instance, place an order with a Telefood shop in San Francisco for delivery of a fruit basket or other food gift to friend or family in Kansas City: the San Francisco shop wires your order to a Telefood shop in Kansas City which makes messenger delivery accompanying the gift with whatever card message you furnish when placing the order.

Telefood membership comprises 500 stores located throughout the country in small as well as major cities and in each instance the store is a leading fine-food shop. You can identify Telefood fine-food shops by a sign displaying on their show window or by sign posted within the store offering telegraph delivery of out-of-town gift orders.

Why the most important people in the world need carpet

Carpet works in so many ways to keep your whole family happy. Soft and warm and colorful, carpet brings beauty to everything that touches it — gives you a new pride in your home.

But, even more important, carpet has a day-to-day usefulness that makes it your greatest wonder-worker. Dad, for instance, finds a peacefulness home has never had before, because carpet swallows the sounds that make a house "jumpy" and noisy.

And the people in your house who sometimes forget to wear their slippers need the warmth that carpet spreads on cold floors — the protection from chills that help colds get started. Along with this warmth, there is the sure, slip-proof footing carpet provides for playing children or adults in a hurry.

Carpet adds so much and asks so little — in time, work and money. Just a turn with your vacuum keeps it lovely. When you move, of course, your beautiful carpet goes with you. You haven't spent time and money on floors you leave behind.

Wouldn't you like your family to have new carpet now? Stop in at your store this week — you'll be glad you did.

Worried about the cost? Enjoy your carpet now and pay for it on convenient budget terms offered by carpet retailers who represent these American manufacturers valley of the Mississippi in the last decades of the Nineteenth Century and the first quarter of the Twentieth; and while it knows no international boundaries—the Iron Curtain included—it can still be created and kept alive only here, in its country of origin. Yet here, strangely enough, it has never been fully appreciated or understood.

Jazz is folk music, but it is not really popular among its own folk—that is, our real jazz is not really popular, and our popular music is rarely real jazz. Originally it was produced for a minority, by a minority; and so it has largely continued to be, despite the tremendous successes of watered-down and imitative jazz as theater music, movie music, dance music, and the category increasingly called "mood music." If you have ever hesitated to bring it into your own home through records or radio, either because you found it forbidding or felt unable to tell good from bad, you will understand what I mean in saying that jazz does not attempt to appeal to everyone.

For a long time jazz suffered from the fact that it was so clearly and categorically the music of the American Negro—one of the most generous of his contributions to his land of adoption. The arguments still go on about how much of jazz is specifically African in origin, but there is little dispute about the primary and continuing role of the Negro musicians as basic innovators. For 40 years, by common consent, the greatest jazz artist of all has been Louis Armstrong, who has had the good fortune to live long enough—as a heart-breaking number did not—to enjoy the fame he deserves. Even the State Department now recognizes what a national asset we have in "Ambassador Satch."

BUT ONLY recently has jazz been even half-way respectable. Today we think nothing of a jazz concert held at Newport or in Carnegie Hall, but there was a time when this would have been inconceivable—and it was not so very long ago. Jazz has come up in American society, up from the absolute bottom. It was cradled in violence and vice, and its parentage was, to say the least, obscure. The great jazz singer Billie Holiday writes of her own origins in terms that might equally apply to the whole music: "Mom and Pop were just a couple of kids when they got married. He was eighteen, she was sixteen, and I was three."

While jazz was growing up, you would hardly have been able to hear it outside its native environment, the cafés and nightclubs that were either on the low-life level or only a step or two above. Nowadays jazz has become physically far more easy to get at, especially through phonograph records. The obstacles that remain between you and it are mainly ones of attitude and taste, and of those a large number are neither your fault nor the music's—but of the fact that you two have never been properly introduced.

PART OF the trouble is that jazz musicians and critics are abnormally sensitive and clannish. Most of them would not have turned to jazz, if it were not also a way of protesting against a world they found hostile or uninteresting, or both. And they have been disregarded by the general public for so long that they have almost become used to a small audience (or none at all) and mistrustful of a large one. Playing what the public wants, in their experience, meant lowering their own standards and betraying their own principles; and in good part it still does. But great poets, so Walt Whitman said, need great audiences. For the exhilarating and irreplaceable experience of satisfying a discriminating listener, the jazz musicians have unfortunately had to rely chiefly upon one another, or upon a tiny clique.

For a long time, too, the only people who could hear good jazz on records were the passionate collectors of obscure labels who had gone to great pains to memorize catalogs of data and track down rare discs. Now the great majority of "classical" jazz recordings, many of them heretofore unavailable to even the most fanatical enthusiast, have been reproduced on LP microgroove in ample quantity. You yourself can hear more authentic jazz, and more of it, and of better sound quality, than many of the major figures of jazz themselves could hear until recently. As a result, jazz is moving into an era of renewed possibilities.

One idea that gets in the way of a wider audience for jazz is the one connecting it to low-down urban night life. A typical movie about a jazz musician will open with a deserted street-scene in the slums at dawn, while a muted trumpet plays a mournful Gershwin melody as the hero staggers into sight. This is part of the legend, which is often—where jazz is concerned—more widely believed than the truth. It is a fantasy built on a small number of undeniable facts, so exaggerated as to hide other facts which are equally important. And one of these hidden, or forgotten, aspects of jazz is its set of solid roots in the countryside—its rural sources that contradict the urban myth.

EVEN in the Blues, which accompanied and preceded the birth of jazz, there was a mixture of cotton patch with the New Orleans material; they sung the sorrows of the back country as well as of Basin Street. As the music moved up the Mississippi, moreover, it was passed on by the Negro musicians to a young generation of whites who were mostly of mid-western and non-city background. Jazz came to them on quiet, tree-lined streets, and still they took to it as though it had been made for them. Into their music went as much of Huckleberry Finn—and of their longing for sunlit, care-free days that would not come again—as of hipflasks, flappers and F. Scott Fitzgerald. One of them, Hoagy Carmichael, who has written songs that will someday be as well-remembered as Stephen Foster's, came to this "golden age" of jazz from an incredibly idyllic, small-town childhood.

"Have you ever seen the big maples?" Hoagy writes in his book of reminiscences. "The trunks are sometimes three feet in diameter and they shoot up, barren of branches, for some 40 or 50 feet, and then they spread out into a huge umbrella of limbs and foliage." Or then, describing an evening in Bloomington, Indiana, when he wrote a song, "It was a hot night, sweet with the death of summer and the hint and promise of fall. A waiting night, a night marking time, the end of a season. The stars were bright, close to me, and the North Star hung low over the trees. . . . Never be 21 again, so in love again. Never feel the things I'd felt. . . . I looked up at the sky and whistled Star Dust."

Granted that these young gentlemen from Indiana were in revolt, what is extraordinary about them is that they responded in their way—here in the middle-most heartland of America, which was then being ridiculed as a cultural desert—to very much the same impulses that drew the Lost Generation abroad to Europe, to expatriation, to Paris. You might say that jazz was the midwestern equivalent of modernism, the outlet of those who had to stay home.

For instance, Hoagy Carmichael and a friend of his called Bill Moenkhaus, the son of a professor and, in Hoagy's words, "the surrealist of the campus," founded a student cult called the Bent Eagles, as a "means of escape from boredom." They cultivated oddities, shouted meaningless words at one another (like "faucet!" and "bush-kirk!"), and drove a 1915 Ford whose upholstery suffered from "Chetherweg"—"a dread disease that causes a slightly nervous lifting of the forefinger, and in its latter stages, is given to causing its victim to snatch up a telephone and scream, 'I don't remember you, but I remember your father!'"

THIS MAY sound like nothing but the immemorably loony behavior of college students, but it was something more than that in one respect: It was intimately bound up with memorable jazz. "Hogwash," said Moenkhaus to Carmichael, "there are other things in the world besides hot music. I forget what they are at the moment, but they are around." It was the context from which came the greatest white jazz musician so far known, the cornetist Leon Bismarck Beiderbecke, known as "Bix." Beiderbecke, too, had much of the country boy in him. Hoagy even remembers a cold dark early morning when they stopped their car by the side of the road and Bix blew his horn out over the open fields—splitting the night with "clean, wonderful banners of melody. . . ."

Much of the jazz-age music has a ricky-ticky-ticky quality to it that sounds dated today, but not the Beiderbecke solos. They reach and soar with an austere intensity that Otis Ferguson once described as "fresh and glistening as creation itself," and each is developed before your ears with a continuity of conception and a sweet clarity of tone that sends chills down the spine, and brings tears to the eyes, of even that most skeptical and demanding of classical music critics, B. H. Haggin. Those who heard Bix in the flesh say the records are no substitute, but they are among the most magnificent we have.

One last block between a number of listeners and this music is the rapidity with which it changes.

YOU CAN AFFORD TRUE HIGH FIDELITY

Most people believe "home music centers" to be expensive, until they discover the high quality and low price of Altec Lansing's 901C record reproducer and 710A loudspeaker combination. This system is actually priced below many so-called hi-fi single units, yet maintains the basic requirement of true high fidelity by housing the loudspeaker in a completely separate cabinet from the amplifier and record player.

In this system Altec has combined outstanding technical excellence with smart furniture styling. The 901C brings together the quality of a famous English automatic record changer and the recognized superiority of the 10 watt Altec 339 amplifier and control pre-amplifier. Completing the combination is a 710A speaker system with a guaranteed range of 60 to 10,000 cycles. Both units are housed in beautiful hardwood finish cabinets which bear the seal of the Fine Hardwoods Association.

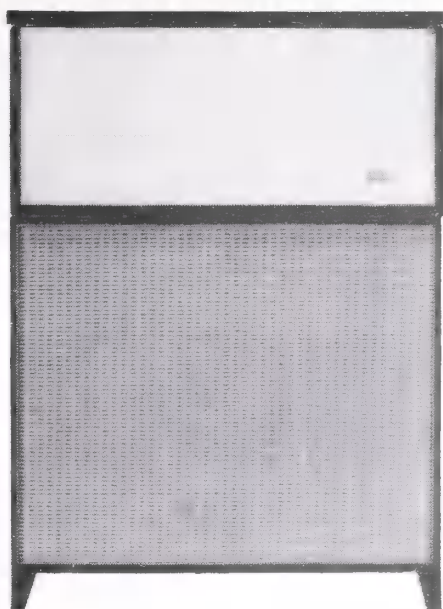

Ask to hear this true high fidelity system at your dealer's, where you will also find systems by Altec Lansing ranging in price from $299 to $1061, or write Dept. 12 -E.

AN INVITATION TO PURE JAZZ

Youth is drawn to it; often the discovery of jazz is simultaneous with that of independence and romance. The music takes on all the charm and fragility of the moment, and as new generations of enthusiasts appear they must find an accent and atmosphere all their own. The music subtly shifts. Idols are toppled and replaced by new ones. "Hot," as a term of approbation, is superseded by "cool." Nothing looks or sounds the same.

FOR THOSE who have grown up with jazz, it is an unnerving experience to come back to it after a five or ten year absence. Many confidently leave it aside—assuming that they know about jazz—during the early-adult years when there is plenty else to think about, only to discover that they no longer do know. Those who crowded the aisles of the Paramount to hear Benny Goodman in the Thirties find they are suddenly confronted with Stan Kenton, whose harsh dissonances repulse them, but seem not to repulse their children. The audience for jazz, in other words, is neither constant nor cumulative—and the music suffers the consequences.

Sometimes the critics themselves give way to the same parochial attachments. They become emotionally committed to the style of jazz which first moved them deeply, and disdainful of any other. There have been experts who would not speak well of anything played after 1927, or anything earlier than 1945. Since the end of World War II there has been more than one distinct, and distinctly successful, revolution in jazz; and it is only within the past two years that tempers have sufficiently cooled for partisans to admit that their opponents, too, have something useful to give the music.

Currently jazz has grown away from the contexts in which it can be played casually and informally, as it once was—one of the prices of respectability being to grow a little stiff and dignified. We have never, for that matter, absorbed jazz fully enough to play it at parties or picnics, where the influence of the barber-shop quartet still reigns supreme. According to the music critic Edward Tatnall Canby, who was in Paris this year, you can hear young French students from the Sorbonne trying hopefully to play jazz, with guitars and clarinets, on the banks of the Seine on a summer evening, but we still have a way to go to match them. We are too self-conscious, and we have not felt compelled to go to the trouble to learn our own music.

Anyone involved with jazz, even as slightly as I have been, has made the discovery that mentioning it puts people on the defensive. They tell you immediately, as though to protect themselves, that they don't know anything about it. Later on they may very shyly admit that they own a jazz record which they play and enjoy, but again they will be quick to assure you that it can't be any good if they have it. (Often it is a very good record indeed that they mention, "Louis Armstrong Plays W. C. Handy," Columbia CL-591, as good as it is easy to assimilate.) For some reason, no one dares to say of jazz, as he might of any other art, "I don't know much about it, but I know what I like."

Of course, both the argumentativeness within jazz, and the outsider's tendency to take it at face value, are signs of vitality and ought to be welcomed. Yet they would be easier to welcome if they did not deny it a potential public. The real difficulty with jazz is that it does not yet have hearers who are both attentive and reliable; its large audiences come and go, its knowledgeable audience is small. What it needs is more people who will listen—thoughtfully, a little aggressively, perhaps—not with the arrogance of connoisseurs but with the pride of paying customers. Jazz doesn't need more know-it-alls (it has plenty already); it needs listeners. It needs you.

Records Worth Hearing:

A single-package survey . . .

A History of Classic Jazz (Riverside SDP-11). An album of five 12" LP's, including more than 60 items that range from African drumming to the present-day revival of Dixieland; accompanied by photographs, complete listings of musicians and dates, plus an introductory essay by Charles Edward Smith. Ideal exposure to major historical periods and styles.

Two required references . . .

The Beiderbecke Story and The Louis Armstrong Story (Columbia ML 4811-3 and CL 851-4). Two jazz giants in three- and four-volume sets. For comparing, but no need to choose between them; both are worth treasuring—one for mild silver, the other for furious gold.

And from the current shelf . . .

Fontessa, the Modern jazz Quartet (Atlantic 1231). The most "intellectual" of the moderns, a result of cross-breeding swing and the Schola Cantorum.

The Six, Bob Wilber and others (Bethlehem BCP-28). A young group that plays both old and new; and the only cultural development that can be traced to Scarsdale High School.

Ella Fitzgerald sings the Cole Porter Song Book (Verve MG V-4001-2). Now among the jazz best sellers, though not strictly jazz, rather an expert and enduring jazz singer showing what can be done.

Chico Hamilton Quintet (Pacific Jazz 1209). Among the best of West Coast "moderns," exercising the flexibility of a new vocabulary.

Miles, the New Miles Davis Quintet (Prestige 7014). A trumpeter now rising to first rank, with a soft and breathy sound, in a setting contrived to let him stand forth.

Lucky Thompson, featuring Oscar Pettiford (ABC-Paramount ABC-111). Also built around one musician, a tenor saxophone player who has learned much from the late Charlie Parker.

Flow Gently, Sweet Rhythm, Charlie Shavers and the original John Kirby Band (Period-SPL 1113). A "reconstruction" of a famous group, with Maxine Sullivan making jazz out of cockles and mussels, alive alive-o.

Tangents in Jazz, Jimmy Guiffre Capitol T 634). The most adventurous and successful experiment in abolishing the hallowed one-two-three-four beat, with a suggestion of what the future may bring.

else has ever sliced cherrystone tomatoes, but my guests always exclaim over them, and they really seem more delicious than the whole ones. There is that subtle size thing introduced again. Whole baby beets are much more attractive than cut-up ones when served as an hors d'oeuvre or a vegetable.

Bounteousness is a most dramatic note to add to your bag of serving tricks. And it is particularly essential at Christmas when abundance and generosity are part of the whole show. When a guest sees a huge tureen of soup or a tremendous bowl of fruit, it puts him in an expansive mood, because, let's face it, we all like the feeling that we can eat as much as we want, and this psychology seems to work wonders on people's good nature—whether they actually do gourmandize or not. The hostess may have a lot left over, but it's well worth it, for she has created a lush effect, and there is always tomorrow to eat the remainder or to put it into the freezer so it can be whipped up at some future time. The last time I had guests on Friday night, I ran up a bouillabaisse in a huge kettle and served it right from the same pot. It was a mighty colorful affair and I did have a lot left over. I took it from the refrigerator, shelled all the fish the next morning and put the remainder in the freezer. Thank goodness I had prepared too much, for a few days later unexpected guests arrived and there I had a first course ready to eat after just a little heating.

If I am serving tarts, I always like to have plenty of extra sauce. Strawberry tarts with masses of melted currant jelly are dreamy. Plum jelly or guava jelly melted can transform a canned peach half into a gourmet treat. If I am having gooseberry tarts, I have a sauce-boat of extra gooseberry sauce thickened with arrowroot or cornstarch. An old tired cake, toasted, can make a wonderful base for fruit and a sauce, and the more sauce the better. The kids tease me because I'm addicted to cheese with the macaroni. I like loads of cheese sauce, for it makes the macaroni so yummy. In other words, I go overboard to achieve an effect of lavishness. A plain baked apple, covered with a rich beautiful sauce and whipped cream is sensational. Let 'er go—your imagination, that is—and have fun dreaming. With today's frozen and bottled juices you can have a merry whirl whipping up sauces for desserts. You couldn't find an easier glamorizer for basically simple foods.

There are so many things that can make your viands truly regal. Dollops of whipped cream in soups or on desserts, spiked with an unusual flavor, from ginger to your favorite liqueur, chopped almonds, filberts and Brazil nuts—these are the kind of things that add to your culinary successes from soup to (no, not nuts) desserts. Ginger is one of my favorite flavor-uppers.

and I can't urge you too strongly to test out the wonderfully different tastes you can evolve by using spices and herbs. (Experiment on the family first, though, before lavishing your original concoctions on guests!)

BASICALLY I am "anti-glitter" except at holiday time. But it is such fun to perk up things with shine and shimmer at one time of the year. If you are using golden Christmas ornaments throughout the house, then get some tiny ones and fix them in "bouquets" to put on your food trays. I really like to use just one or two colors and keep my schemes simple. You will find you can have a more effective house if you bear this in mind. Carry your motifs right from the tree to the food level. If you're having a pink Christmas, keep your food and décor in pink tones. If you are having a "white Christmas," dream up all the white things you can use as decorative notes with your food, from whipped cream in the soup to powdered sugar or coconut on the dessert. Cake and candy decorative items such as tiny silver and gold "shot" can be sprinkled over desserts, not just on cakes as everyone thinks of them. Glacé fruit, to go with your color scheme, can be tossed into a sauce to make a glorious textured topping for puddings or creams. Cherries are particularly effective. I'm also sort of partial to "B-Deks," sugar crystals in colors like red and green, which come in glass vials and give you a quick, easy scattering of color for desserts. Petals of flowers are unusual enough to add glamour as well as a delicious flavor. Crystallized rose petals and carnation petals and violets are dreamy extras to add to pies, cakes and creams. A gardenia petal flung into the tea pot with jasmine tea gives it a delightful added scent, so a cup of tea becomes something to marvel over. Crushed candies, such as peppermint sticks over ice cream, are a fun addition. Crushed nut brittle flung on custard pie or a creamy custard make a near "crème brûlée."

If you are having a "Della Robbia" Christmas, then all your décor will be in fruit. It's fun to run up orange or lemon "trees." They scent the house with their fragrance and they are a lovely color note. (Directions were given in our March 1956 issue.) A big ice cake made with fruits and placed in the center of your punch bowl is a conversation piece for your open house during the holidays. (This was described in our February 1954 issue.) Carrying this motif down to the food platters, you can have china Della Robbias, made of miniature china fruits which you simply group like wreaths. I usually arrange mine around serving bowls—small bowls for sauces, large bowls for nuts, etc. Put these in the center of a tray, with the colorful fruit around them, then sandwiches or whatever you are serving, and you've made a picture.

Of course, the most dramatic touch you can give anything is fire. Candles are usually associated with birthdays, but for years we had candles on the cake at Christmas, because the first year the kids were aware of the significance of candles for birthdays they asked, "But, Mother, it is Santa Claus's birthday, so why aren't there candles on the Christmas cake?" Needless to say, candles got whisked right on to the cake. It was a "grave oversight" on Mother's part.

The burning of hot rum or brandy is really about the greatest show—especially for desserts. You can do this in a chafing dish, or in a shallow pan. Or you can bring in a baked Alaska (or any pudding) with half an eggshell full of warm brandy sunk into the top and set aflame just before you serve it.

FLAMING sauces are very effective and simple to arrange after a little practice. Of course there is a secret: You must have the liquid you intend to burn warmed in a saucepan before you pour it over the food to be flamed. When the brandy mixes with the sauce it will be diluted. You can flambé practically anything—fruit, pancakes, even roast fowl, fish or meat can be lightly flambéed before serving. And besides the excitement of the "fireworks," it adds an interesting flavor.

Well, as you've probably guessed, I am so enthusiastic about the whole business of making the simplest foods go glamorous. I can hardly wait to start dreaming up new twists for this year's Christmas entertaining. It's a challenge, but one that's so much fun to work out that it doesn't seem like work at all! And when you hear your guests' delighted exclamations over the wonders you have wrought, you're up on Cloud Nine with all the other Christmas angels.

to "forget Christmas this year."

Sally Jacobsen, who is one of our friends, married a man with a brilliant mind, but he had grown to adulthood without ever having a birthday cake, a Christmas tree, or a kiss from his mother. Sally certainly had to start from scratch in building up family traditions in that home.

When there were just the two of them, Sally wasn't too successful. She made birthday cakes and decorated Christmas trees, but her husband seemed embarrassed by them. But when Junior came along, the father was determined that his child should not be denied the fun he had missed. We can still see that first Christmas tree for Junior when he was only a few months old. The father had covered their one tree with enough decorations for a dozen trees. There are three children in that family now, and they are establishing some fine family customs, but the wife could very well have given it up as hopeless in the early years of their marriage.

It seems to us that everyone has a right to a birthday cake. The cake is the high point of a birthday to many children, and it should be to even more. But some of today's children think of birthdays only in terms of the gifts they will receive. They ask for bigger and bigger parties in order to collect more and more "loot."

One year, our Janie wanted to invite everyone in her class at school to her birthday party. We talked it over and decided that we could afford only a very simple party for so many children. Then, too, some of the children couldn't afford to bring a gift, so we would have to write "No gifts, please" on the invitations. Janie still wanted to go through with it. It was quite a crowd for an indoor party, but everyone seemed happy about the whole thing. However, the next year Janie decided that a smaller party would be better.

WHEN there is to be a party, it is good for the child to help with the planning, and with the buying of food and favors. But until a child is quite mature, it is wise for an adult to be in charge of the actual party to see that the entertainment follows according to plan. It has been interesting to observe that our children do not rate a party according to food or favors nearly so much as to the way things "click" after they arrive.

Betty attended two Halloween parties on successive evenings. She thought one was a good party while the other was not. In explaining her evaluation, she said, "Well, one just wasn't planned, we played anything anybody suggested, but there were always some kids who wanted to play something else." It might be wise to add here that elementary school children in our family do not attend evening parties except on Halloween when parents take turns sponsoring such affairs to keep the children from playing mischievous pranks.

DO YOU remember in Bellamy Partridge's "Country Lawyer" how the birthday child was allowed on that one day to do anything he wanted to so long as it was possible and within reason? Didn't he sit on top of a ladder to eat his birthday dinner one time? I have tried to promote that idea as a way of celebrating my own birthday. I have never gone so far as to fail to feed the baby or even to eat my dinner atop a ladder, but I have forgotten the cleaning and the laundry for that one day and spent as much time as possible in reading, painting, writing letters, or some similar luxury. Best of all, I have announced that on my birthday I would do no cooking. The rest of the family either got busy preparing sandwich meals or decided that we should eat our dinner out. There is no reason why the mother's birthday should not become part of family tradition, too.

I think it was about the time I learned that babies grew in their mother's bodies that I began giving my mother a gift on my birthday. At first it was something from the dime store, but I'm sure she appreciated it as much as the more substantial gifts of later years. After I learned that my father, too, had something to do with my being here, I included him in my birthday-giving. I still do.

Washington's Birthday, Lincoln's Birthday, July Fourth, Columbus Day, Memorial Day—we remember them all. A tiny flag atop each sandwich at lunchtime, a sprig of a tree with cherries fastened to it, or a picnic; and always the large flag displayed from our front porch with the children helping to put it up and take it in before sundown. Usually, too, there is the story to explain the observance and meaning of each holiday.

Perhaps I should also mention another tradition we have in our family. On the last day of school in June, after the promotion cards have been received so that no one could possibly think we were "apple polishing," we write notes to the teacher of each child. We try to tell how much she or he has helped our child grow. With our four children, we have never found one teacher who has not contributed something toward giving our child a better life.

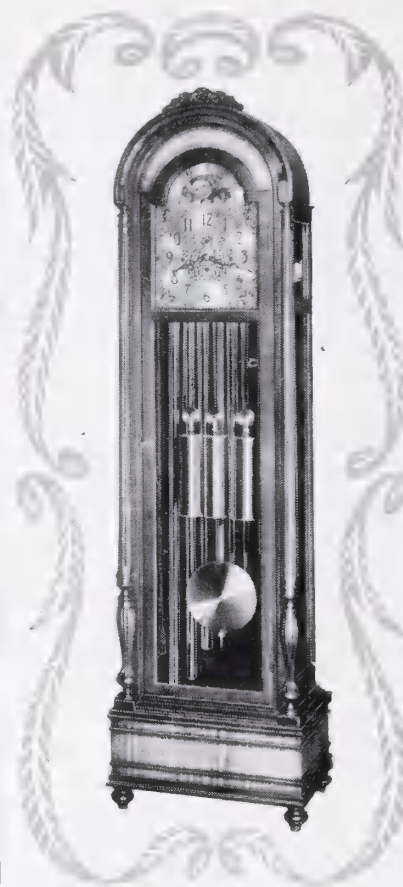

One year there was a sweet little inexperienced teacher who had quite a time with the rather ram-bunctious group that our son Bruce was in. We must admit that she did not do as good a job of teaching fundamentals as other teachers might have. But she was a talented musician and she did create in those children an appreciation of, and a love for good music.

Not so long ago, I was upstairs after Bruce was in bed and nearly asleep. Someone downstairs was playing the piano. As soon as they began playing a Chopin composition, that sleepy boy called, "Hear that, Mother? That always reminds me of Miss W—. Isn't it beautiful? When she played it on her harp she made me think of an angel. I wonder what happened to her. I wish we hadn't given her such a rough time."

So even the least successful of teachers had given Bruce something fine. We don't know where she is now so we can't tell her how her music is still part of Bruce after five or six years. But we are glad we told her, on the last day of school, how much the children appreciated her music in that note.

WE HAVE two kinds of Thanksgiving observances. We usually have a larger family get-together on that day than on any other holiday, with grandparents and great grandparents, whenever possible. When for some reason the larger family is not together, we have on several occasions sent our dinner money to those who need it more. One year we lighted candles on the table and ate bologna sandwiches and milk and topped it off with pumpkin pie. We were happy because we had sent our dinner money to an ailing boy in Norway who needed a snowsuit.

Another year, we sent our Thanksgiving money to the Orient.

That year our older boy became so interested that week after week he added all of his allowance to the fund. We finally had to discourage his generosity when his hair became practically long enough to braid and his clarinet teacher began telephoning to see why our son could not afford a new reed for his clarinet. These personal items which were ordinarily covered by his allowance had been forgotten in his joy of giving.

On some occasions we have invited college students, often international students, who live far away from home, to share our Thanksgiving dinner. It is interesting to see total strangers come to dinner, and then stay all afternoon and for supper and well into the evening. It seems to indicate to us that they were lonely and welcomed the opportunity to become part of a family for that one day.

WHETHER we eat or whether we fast, whether we have family or strangers as guests, we always go round the table before we eat in order that each person can tell what he is most grateful for. It varies from loved ones to good food, from the opportunity of living in a free land to the fun we have with our beloved friends. But it is all genuine gratitude.

Last year it was our youngest child's turn to say grace on Thanksgiving Day. After she had listened to a dozen or more persons tell what they were most grateful for, she began her prayer like this: "I'm am thankful for the new tablecloth, and I hope that nobody spills anything on it."

I always intend to write a letter to a different person each day during November to express to them some special feeling of gratitude. But I have never succeeded in doing more than a half dozen. These have been to a family whose soldier-son gave his life to make this a better world (we fervently hope), to a writer whose article or story helped me to see some truth more clearly.

Big, exciting package of stainless-protected beauty and fun-filled miles

is the Stainless look*

The growing accent on stainless steel trim and functional parts continues strong in next year's cars. More than 70 uses for Allegheny Ludlum Stainless inside, outside and underneath the new models are on record. Some cars use more stainless steel than others, depending on styling and design, but they all use it for the same basic reasons:

- (1) No other metal can match stainless steel for hardness, strength and resistance to corrosion, heat and wear.
- (2) No other metal is as well suited to the rough, all-weather beating that your car has to take.

A-L Stainless Steel brightwork won't chip, peel or blister because it's a solid metal, solid-bright all the way through, not just plated. It resists dents and scratching; requires no protective coating; shines up with just soap and water. It preserves new-car beauty, saves endless polishing and enhances resale value during the entire life of your car . . . and that's worth having.

In fact, stainless steel brings you benefits wherever it's used, in your car and in many hundreds of other applications in homes and industry. • For an idea of some of them, write for a copy of our new booklet "Stainless Steel for Living." to a minister or speaker whose talk inspired me, and to members of my family who give so much of themselves to others. There are many more I could write and my goal still remains one per day during November.

WHILE we go all out for most holidays, we do not observe Easter as many families do. We try to stress the religious significance and do no gift-giving beyond some Easter candy for the children. We dye eggs together and have a special menu that day, but we laugh among ourselves at the story of the Easter bunny, yet try not to spoil it for our neighborhood children who consider it the high point of Easter. If new clothing is necessary, we buy it in time to wear it before Easter or else we wait until after Easter.

We made the mistake of telling our first child the real significance of Good Friday and Easter too soon. He became emotionally upset about it, even though we were calm in making the explanation. With the other children we have attempted to explain Easter as a time when Nature seems to come to life again after appearing to be dead or asleep all winter. This is a good foundation upon which to build the true meaning of Easter when the child is nine or ten.

Perhaps we are not very consistent, for we have not separated Santa Claus and gifts from Christmas. But somehow that seems different. Since there was the bringing of gifts to the Christ child on that first Christmas, it still seems logical that we should give gifts to those we love and to those in need on Christmas.

At first we were concerned that our children would abandon their belief in the Christ child when they outgrew the Santa Claus legend, but it seems to be a simple matter to graduate to the conception of Santa Claus as "the spirit of giving." It is fortunate, too, when there are several children in the family because the older ones need to continue the myth for the benefit of the younger ones.

Our observance of Christmas lasts the whole month of December. It would require pages to describe it. Perhaps it is enough to say here that it centers around the religious meaning of the day and that we stress giving instead of getting. Daily, we add a new story or carol, and something new to the holiday decorations. In the same way we try to become a bit more thoughtful and hospitable with each day, as we gradually build up the Christmas spirit to its climax on December twenty-fifth.

ONE WORD of caution concerning holidays. While following some plan, they still need to remain flexible. We have known families who have built up such iron-clad traditions that they have become shackles. Married children are expected to return to the old homestead for each holiday, with no thought of the families of their mates, and with no thought of building up family traditions in the homes of the newer generation.

But traditions which grow out of happy family living (where consideration for each other comes before personal desires) are the big, flexible customs that are just naturally bound to carry over into the homes of the future.

deeply what it takes to keep him, his children and the whole house a happy one: the skills, the knowledge, the wide reading, the profound philosophy and culture—all of which it takes.

So boys are just as important here as girls. Not only to learn that manly art of outdoor cooking, but that most human of all arts, which is cooking. Certainly if boys grow up, as they have in the past, with a growing contempt for girls' activities and interests, that contempt will abide in some form in adulthood. And if they themselves are not inspired in some way to know, really know (which means fully appreciate) the womanly art of homemaking (which is nothing less than the art of life itself), then the future of the family is in a state of extreme danger.

Fortunately that is not the case. Children are witnessing the almost child-like delight of their own parents in the discovery that cooking is fun, culture and real happiness. Young boys are hearing their own fathers discuss the right way to roast meat, which elevates that type of conversation at least to the level of how to hit a homerun or lay down a sacrifice bunt. More than ever it is true that some sense of understanding of what it takes to create a good dish or meal on the part of the husband is necessary for the continuing interest of the wife in cooking. It's a good eater who makes a good cook.

As for the young girls, they are naturally interested in keeping house. The way they play at it, without any such realistic toys as we show on our pages prove it. All we have to do is encourage them.

This year, an extraordinary variety of toys related to homemaking, realistic to the last working detail, can help awaken our future homemakers to the pleasures and satisfaction to be derived from housekeeping activities. Knowing that participation in the routine of the household contributes much to a child's development and that children feel a need to imitate their elders, American toy makers have duplicated many of the labor-saving devices which have made housekeeping so pleasurable, scaling these to a size suitable for children.

The blender, mixer, electric washing machine and vacuum cleaner, along with miniature electric ranges styled in colors of their full size counterparts, are fascinating grownups as well as children in toy shops across the country. Brand name packaged foods which are practically failure-proof come in sets of varying types and sizes. Any child who can read and follow simple directions may enjoy a feeling of accomplishment by making biscuits, baking a pie or a cake or some other dish that will be admired and enjoyed by friends and family. This same child will also find it interesting to wash up all the pots and pans and get equipment back in order with the help of her very own cleaning tools.

Child psychologists and educators have long agreed on the importance of such experiences. Many of us, thinking back to our own childhood, realize that probably no occasions are remembered with more satisfaction than those early adventures in the kitchen. There were cookies to cut out, or even better, a piece of dough to knead and shape into a tiny loaf of bread. The acknowledgment of our achievement by an older member of the family and perhaps appraisal by Mother or Dad as "the best I've ever tasted," helped create a lasting interest in cooking for many of us.

Working alongside his or her parents is the most fascinating form of play for a child. It may be cooking, gardening, or even dusting or running a vacuum cleaner. We are told that any housekeeping activity helps a child feel close to parents and very much like them. This builds security in the feeling of "belonging," of contributing to family happiness and well being. These are important years in the future happiness and well being of the individual.

While children have always loved to cook, a report by Mrs. Irene H. Wolgamot, nutrition specialist of New Jersey State University, supplies some surprising statistics. A recent test of 180,000 senior high school girls disclosed that 83 per cent knew how to be well groomed, but only 52 per cent knew how to cook. With a knowledge of food of such great importance in good homemaking as well as a valuable social asset, this suggests we should allow children to cook at an early age.

That interest is there is shown by the report of toy makers on an increasing demand for realistic workable toys in the field of homemaking. Now that Dad lends a helping hand in the kitchen and finds cooking a creative art that he enjoys, Junior likes to don a chef's cap too, and get in on the fun. One unusual sounds. He is reaching for performance which might be called psychological—something he has dreamed of hearing and has not yet heard.

His experiments are extensive and costly and he is continually searching. His objective is not one of being pleased, but rather one of being critical. His pleasure in listening comes from his desire and ability to criticize. He is determined, and rightly so, not to be satisfied. If he permitted such a thing to happen, he would have lost his greatest pleasure—his hobby. He is very definitely valuable to the growth of the high-fidelity industry, particularly as a critic.

WITH enough time, patience, equipment, know-how and money, because it is expensive, a satisfactory high-fidelity rig can be put together of individually manufactured units, but top satisfactory performance is by no means average. The words "high fidelity," which originally meant greatest faithfulness of reproduction of the original sound and music, have become almost meaningless as a term. Let me repeat my original definition—a high-fidelity instrument is one which reproduces everything recorded on a modern high-fidelity record without addition, subtraction or distortion. That's all any instrument should attempt to do because that's all there is!

A high-fidelity reproducing system or instrument should be primarily a complete musical instrument and not merely a collection of electronic parts. By proper design, the acoustical cavity or "sound-box" should come first. It is just as important to high-fidelity reproduction as it is in the case of the sound-box of a piano, a harp or a cello. Starting with a carefully designed acoustical cavity, the speaker system should then be matched to the acoustical characteristics of this sound-box or cabinet and to this speaker system, the amplifier, cross-over network and pickup should be matched, creating a completely integrated and acoustically balanced musical reproducing instrument.

It is certainly doubtful if the great Stradivarius, in designing one of his priceless violins, first dried some gut to make the strings and then added the frets, bridge and other parts and lastly put a box measuring (and I quote from a leading hi-fi hobby magazine) "somewhere between six and ten cubic feet" under them. I feel that he regarded the acoustics as the first consideration and the necessary parts as the servant of the music rather than as an end unto themselves.

The same is true of the units of a properly designed high-fidelity reproducing system or instrument. The electronics should be the servant, rather than the master, of the musical reproduction. All high-fidelity reproducing systems or instruments must consist of the same basic elements—a record player, a pick-up with cartridge to translate mechanical motion into electrical energy, a power amplifier, a speaker system with attendant filter system or cross-over network and an acoustical cavity or enclosure.

Completely matched, integrated and acoustically balanced component systems, sold as complete systems rather than piece-meal, are available for those who wish high-fidelity systems installed in music walls or in special cabinetry. But in these systems the same principles of integrated design which I have just discussed are followed.

As in all hobbies, the hi-fi fan has adopted certain engineering half-truths, some of which were true years ago and some of which are true only when systems are put together without sufficient engineering knowledge. In the case of systems put together without sufficient regard for both electronic and acoustical principles, the amateur may experience difficulty in obtaining full volume and full reproduction of the lowest bass notes without mechanical or acoustical feed-back.

IN properly designed complete furniture instruments this is certainly not the case, as demonstration easily shows, and the purchaser of such a well-designed and acoustically balanced instrument has the advantage of a beautiful piece of furniture to grace the room.

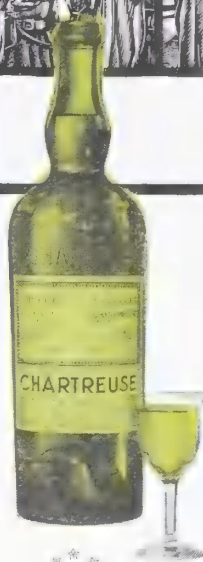

Another spectre from the past which haunts the hi-fi fan is the belief that a record changer cannot provide high-fidelity performance equal to that of a manual record player. It should be remembered that all that any record player can do is to rotate the record at a constant predetermined speed without electrical or mechanical noise.

THE FURNITURE INSTRUMENT

The added convenience of a record changer is available in well designed record changers without in any way detracting from the proper performance of the record playing mechanism.

A third controversial point seems to be the matter of speaker enclosure. There are several methods of producing the speaker enclosure or sound-box. The method in itself is not important. What is important is whether or not the enclosure possesses desirable acoustical characteristics and whether the rest of the system is acoustically matched to and balanced with this "sound-box."

It should be remembered that to most of us music is fun and not a business. If you get your fun from experimentation and from constant change and attempted improvement, then by all means enjoy yourself with the literally hundreds of different specimens of each type of unit, each with its claims of superiority. But if you, like most of us, are searching for perfection of musical reproduction, then let your own ears judge what you wish to hear. All the curves, graphs and tabulations in the world will not convince you of what constitutes entertainment for you, if the resultant doesn't sound good.

To repeat, since music is fun, then by all means let your own ears measure what is the best entertainment for you. Make an on-the-spot comparative demonstration and get the instrument that will most satisfy your own requirements and desires.

ous when Peter Stuyvesant acquired his pegleg nearby. But the big news about them is that now they are readily accessible to anyone who's looking for a warm, quiet, tropical and immaculately clean place to hibernate. With the right plane connections, you could be whisked there from New York in seven to nine hours.

St. Maartens is the largest, and our informants say that its beaches are the most glorious they've ever stretched out on. There's the new Little Bay Hotel on the sparkling sands near Phillipsburg, a real Dutch treat, they tell us, kept in whistle-clean order, serving the kind of abundant, painstakingly prepared food you find in Amsterdam or Rotterdam. In fact, most of its food and all of its meat comes by air express from Holland. Daily tariff from December to April is about $15 single, $27 double, for room, bath and sea-viewing veranda, including those generous meals. There's also the Pasangrahan guest house, with similarly low rates, and the brand new Lido Guesthouse, which is about ready to open. Roughly, there are regular accommodations on the island for about 70 outlanders, so you get an idea of how "unspoiled" it is.

St. Maartens is part French and travelers are particularly struck by the agreeable merger of French oo-la-la and Dutch thoroughness. The French town of Marigot, they say, has the nostalgic look of a Riviera fishing village with the boats and nets drawn up along its beach.

Little Saba is a rocky volcanic cone that juts so suddenly out of the sea that there is scarcely more beach than a strip of pebbles. Visitors have to be landed here in crash boats, an exciting experience they talk about forever after. A mad dash by jeep over a rocky road takes you to the top of the island, bewilderingly called The Bottom because it's a town cupped in the crater of a dead volcano, surrounded by rich slopes of farmland. Population is chiefly Dutch, French, English and Scotch.

Few men are evident in Saba because most of them are seamen or fishermen and usually away from their firesides. And they are such skilled seamen that the world's greatest shipping companies seek out their services as sea captains. Women are accomplished at embroidery. No hotels here, but the government runs two simple but good guest houses. Rates, about $5.30 a day with the usual hearty Dutch meals.

St. Eustatius, "Statia" to those in the know, lives placidly with a nice little yam-growing trade and the ruins of great past prosperity. It's fertile, green, with powdery beaches. The government runs a guest house (four rooms and two baths) in the town of Oranjestad.

St. Maartens, largest of the three islands, has a commercial airport. Twice a week Air France flies here from Puerto Rico, Antigua, and Guadalupe. KLM Royal Dutch Airlines flies in twice a week from Curaçao and once a week from St. Kitts. St. Eustatius has a tiny airstrip where light planes may land.

Our secret agents, recently returned, tell us that you can make a wonderful trip to these islands by flying the chartered mail plane from Charlotte Amalie on St. Thomas. It's a twin-engine plane that leaves every Thursday for St. Maartens and Statia. And no small part of the thrill is flying with Jack Monsanto, the owner-pilot, manager of Jack's Flight Service, who has a reputation for knowing every key in the Caribbean.

If you'd prefer to visit the islands by sea, don't under any circumstances take the mail boat. It has no engine and the seas can be rough even when the skies are blue, and the trip has been known to take a day. Instead, do your island hopping by native schooner.

The famous Dutch government motor schooner, "Blue Peter," is again making the rounds of the islands twice a week from St. Maarten to Saba to St. Eustatius, and connects with the KLM air service to and from Curaçao, so you might plan yourself an all-Dutch junket. From island to island it takes from three to five hours. On one of its trips, it continues to St. Kitts in the British West Indies.

Hamilton Bi-Centennial Doings

Alexander Hamilton, it turns out, was born in the West Indies on the island of Nevis, near St. Kitts, in 1757, and you can still see the stairway in the house where he was born. He also lived on St. Croix, in the Virgin Islands. So great doings are scheduled down here for the celebration of his 200th birthday. They're scheduled to begin on January 11, and several cruises have been whipped up to coincide with the festivities. To wit: The Holland-America Line's delightful "Ryndam" will depart from Norfolk on January 25 and call at Nevis on February 3. The Clipper Line's "Stella Polaris," leaving from New Orleans on February 16, will be in St. Kitts on February 24.

Cunard's "Mauretania" leaves New York on February 28, gets to St. Kitts on March 4. The Home Lines' "Homer" departs from New York on January 23, arriving at St. Kitts on January 29. All, of course, will be calling at other islands en route.

How to Get There

There are now so many ways of getting to these once inaccessible little islands that it's hard to list directions. From New York you may fly to Bermuda via British Overseas Airways (BOAC), then switch to its beautifully operated subsidiary, British West Indian Airways (BWIA), which flies its quiet Vickers Viscount planes into Puerto Rico, Barbados and Trinidad, and also has flights into St. Thomas, St. Lucia, Grenada, Antigua, St. Kitts, Martinique and Guadalupe. The new Leeward Islands Air Transport Company is now regularly flying Piper Apache twin-engine, four-passenger planes between San Juan, St. Kitts, Montserrat and Antigua. Pan American, Avianca, Braniff, KLM, Air France, Trans-Canada Airlines, Delta and Eastern fly to certain main jumping-off spots where you can make connections for the smaller islands.

Many steamship lines include at least some of these southerly islands on their cruises—for instance, Grace, Moore-McCormack, Standard Fruit, United Fruit, Royal Netherlands, Cunard, French Line, Norwegian America, Clipper, Canadian Pacific. The Alcoa Steamship Company, however, comes closest to having a regular island-stopping schedule and offers a wide variety of cruises of different durations. The ships run to the Guianas to haul bauxite for the making of aluminum, and usually end their trip in Mobile, Alabama. Alcoa's fancier passenger-freighters leave from New Orleans, go down to Trinidad and the Guianas. Its 12-passenger freighters, which leave from Montreal, Halifax, New York, or New Orleans, will also take you to Trinidad and the Guianas, and at pretty reasonable prices. One 10-day trip is about $250. They're lots of fun, as we've found out for ourselves. You don't have frills, you eat your meals with the officers at strange hours (dinner was at 5 P.M., as we recall it), but accommodations and food are excellent. You get to feel so at home that pretty soon you'll be snooping in the galley as the spirit moves you.

But if you've got this part of the Caribbean on your mind, see your travel agent now, because lots of other people have the same idea.

YOU CAN'T BE WRONG WITH ROMANY

Remember, Romany Real Clay Tile is a one-time selection. It will outlive and outwear the house itself. It is one of the most economical materials in residential construction, measured by years of service. And with Romany you get many "plus values." It is real tile, not a substitute. It is precision made from fine native clays in huge modern kilns fired in excess of 2,000 deg. F. to give Romany extra strength and durability. Romany is fade proof, fire proof and wear proof, with the easiest of all surfaces to keep clean and spotless. And think of the many ways this tile is being used in the modern home. For bathroom walls and lavatory tops, of course. For kitchen walls to shrug off grease stains and for counter tops resistant to extreme heat and cold. For the Family Room and for little tot bedrooms where youthful exuberance can damage a less sturdy surface. Elsewhere, too, for sheer decor.

Yes, you just can't be wrong when you insist on Romany, the real clay tile. It is your best buy.

ONLY YOUR GOOSE TO COOK

was baked in September at Alexandria, Virginia? Getting down to cases about the menu on page 137:

The smoked fish platter, which you pass around with drinks in the living room before dinner, will include as wide a variety as is available in your community—and your community in this case is the whole country, for smoked specialties carry well through the mail. There are hundreds of places famous for smoked fish, among them the Farmers' Market in Los Angeles, and Al's Fishery, 416 East Grand Street, Chicago (Trader Vic orders his smoked shrimp from here to serve in San Francisco). In New York you may order from Rahmeyer's International Delicatessen, 1022 Third Avenue.

Smoked fish and smoked meat, too, may be stored in the refrigerator or even the freezer, but they should be served at room temperature like good red wines.

Fresh Horseradish Sauce

If you want to grate your own horseradish, it's all very well. But if you would rather enjoy the incomparable flavor of the freshly grated variety without the bother, you must know about Junius Quick-frozen Horseradish which is now available in many markets. If your favorite spot doesn't have it, write to Junius Food Products Corp., 1878 North Sheffield Avenue, Chicago, Ill., to find out where it is sold. It's well worth going to a bit of trouble to find. Bottled and well-drained horseradish or dehydrated horseradish may be used, but with Junius this sauce is wondrous.

Fold 4 tablespoons, fresh or frozen, grated horseradish into 1 cup sour cream. Add little or no salt, depending upon the saltiness of the smoked fish, but flavor liberally with freshly ground pepper, black or white, and add 1 tablespoon prepared mustard or a few tablespoons of fresh chopped dill or Spice Islands dried dill tops.

Sweet heavy whipping cream may be used instead of sour cream. Whip ½ cup cream till stiff and slowly add 2 tablespoons lemon juice. Proceed as above.

Green Turtle Soup

There are any number of fine brands. Ancora is one of the best and widely distributed. The 21 Club in New York puts up its own, which can be ordered by mail. $2 prepaid for a 20-ounce tin which serves 4.

Roast Goose, Della Robbia

Recipes for roasting goose usually begin like this: "Singe, carefully remove pin feathers (this is a long job but should be done with great care), then wash and scrub; draw the goose (remove the inside contents), wash again in 2 waters and wipe carefully with cheesecloth. Stuff and truss." Some people suggest pricking the goose, others call for adding to the fat by laying on thin strips of salt pork.

But we say: "Forget all of this!" Order a quick-frozen goose from Candlewood Farms (see page 137). Set it solid-frozen into the oven at about 350° F. to thaw. This will take about 10 to 15 minutes per pound. Remove from the oven, allow to cool a few minutes, then sprinkle inside and out with salt and pepper and rub with a cut lemon, also inside and out, rubbing with the rind of the lemon as well as the cut side. (Better wash your lemon carefully because a mold-retardant is now often used on the skin, which tastes and smells dreadful!) Then place this lemon along with another halved lemon in the inside also, and add a handful of celery tops. All this will be removed before the goose comes to the table, but the flavors will have seasoned the meat deliciously.

Before the goose goes back into the oven, remove any visible chunks of fat. Set the goose on a high rack so that there is no danger of it resting in drippings. Be sure to use a pan that is deep enough to hold the drippings; otherwise, you must pour off the fat that accumulates from time to time.

After thawing, roast at 300° F. about 25 minutes per pound. In present-day ovens and at low temperatures, basting is not necessary. Use a meat thermometer to make sure that the goose is properly cooked. It should register 180° to 190°. If the skin is not quite crisp, you may turn the oven up high for 10 minutes at the end to about 450° F. If goose seems to be browning too fast, cover for a little while with aluminum foil, but make sure that the foil is laid on loosely so that the goose does not steam. Count on one pound of goose to serve one person.

Schmaltz and Grebenes

From Love and Knishes, an Irrepressible Guide to Jewish Cooking, by Sara Kasdan, Vanguard, $3.50, we have culled these directions for rendering the fat of goose or chicken.

"Schmaltz . . . a little magic it is. If it would be gold, it couldn't be so rich. If it would be perfume, it couldn't smell so good. When you put it in what's cooking, it not only has its own flavor but it brings out all the other flavors, too. Monosodium glutamate (such a word!) can be ashamed."

Ingredients: chicken skin [optional and instead of chicken read goose, P. C.], 1 pound chicken fat, 1 small onion, diced, ¼ cup water. Cut chicken skin and fat into 1-inch squares. Place chicken fat, skin, onion and water in a heavy saucepan over a very low flame [or in a slow oven, P. C.]. Simmer gently until all the fat has been rendered and the chicken skin is crisp and brown. Strain schmaltz. Drain grebenes (cracklings).

Della Robbia Wreath

If all the expletives muttered under the breath by frustrated garnish-ridden carvers could be collected, the holiday air would be blue indeed! But here is a way to combine beauty and drama with functionalism. Wind a heavy wire with leaves from edible plants, such as lemon or huckleberry, and, using florist wire, secure in place clusters of grapes and small lemons, tangerines, kumquats and/or lady apples. Place the goose in the center of the heated platter and lay the wreath carefully around it. The wreath must be lifted off and set aside before the "lord and master" begins to carve.

Wild Rice with Mushrooms

Cook wild rice according to package directions or use canned wild rice, but heat by steaming over hot water rather than in hot water as some directions suggest. Rice should be tender, without being mushy, and well drained. To 2 cups hot rice add ½ cup chopped B-in-B broiled in butter mushrooms, ½ teaspoon onion salt and a few grains of cayenne pepper tossed together. Makes 5 servings.

Chestnut Purée

With goose or with game, nothing is more appropriate than a purée of chestnuts. Nor is anything easier if you use a can of Purée of Marrons Nature manufactured by Clément Faugier, Privas, France. This pound can of most excellent purée is available all over the United States, often in supermarkets—Gristede's, for instance. Add to the chestnuts in a saucepan, ½ cup cream, salt and pepper to taste and perhaps the merest dash of lemon juice and a flicker of nutmeg. Makes 4 or 5 servings.

Red Cabbage and Apples, Flemish Style

They serve this combination in Holland, too, where it is known as roodekool. Brown a medium size chopped onion in 2 tablespoons of goose fat—chicken, bacon fat, or even butter will do. Add to a 16-oz. jar Greenwood red cabbage, along with 1 cup Comstock canned apple slices, ¼ teaspoon of ground allspice, then cover, heat slowly over low fire until thoroughly hot and the flavor is well blended; taste and add extra salt, pepper and a little lemon juice if you think it needs a little improvement.

Uncrude Crudités

The most exquisite bits and pieces of the most elegant toothsome crisp raw vegetables are known all over France as crudités. All sorts of combinations are possible. Thin crisp slices of potato or turnip, paper-thin wisps of beet, crisp green beans may be served along with the more usual raw cauliflowerettes, radishes, carrot sticks or curls, unpeeled cucumber fingers, wedges of fennel, nosegays of watercress and, of course, Pascal celery. If desired, your favorite herbs and a few grains of coarsely ground pepper may be mixed into the dipping salt.

Relish Tray

This can and should be a conversation piece, as well as a palette of jewel-like colors and piquant flavors. Set on a lazy Susan, a sectioned tray or in a collection of matching bowls, these relishes could also serve as a centerpiece on the table. Particularly good with goose, duck or suckling pig is one of Italy's lesser known specialties. Mostarda di Cremona—glazed spiced fruits in syrup—cherries, citron, apricots, almonds, pears, figs, pumpkin, peaches and plums, flavored surprisingly and most delightfully with mustard. The Italians call it "the mustard which is not," and it is served traditionally on Twelfth Night, often with little raviolis made in the shape of cocked hats. An addendum to remember! B. Altman & Co. has it in New York. From Altman's also you can get spiced sweet watermelon rind, cantaloupe, honeydew melon and a delightful ginger conserve put up by Grace A. Rush, Inc., 3715 Madison Road, Cincinnati, Ohio. Preserved Swedish lingonberries like tiny tart cranberries are available all over. As for Old Forester bourbon jelly, you have to live in certain states in order to be able to buy it. For information you could write to the manufacturer, Huter-Quest & Company, Louisville, Kentucky.

Sparkling Coconut Snowballs, Chocolate Anisette

This is the way the dessert is listed on the menu of the Newarker at the airport in Newark, New Jersey. If you believe, as many do, that a really festive meal must end with "fireworks," this is your dish and one which can be put together months ahead of time and kept in the freezer for spur-of-the-moment festivities too. Use scoops or balls of ice cream, roll in Baker's Angel Flake Coconut and place in the freezer for at least an hour (it can be left there for weeks).

At serving time cover the bottom of a sherbet glass or supreme glass about 1/2 inch deep with your favorite chocolate sauce, add 1 tablespoon of anisette liqueur (Hiram Walker now has not only white but red anisette as well). Place the coconut crusted ice cream ball on top of the sauce, insert a Fourth-of-July sparkler. Turn out the lights in the dining room and bring in ing into your home and enjoy an experience that is turning increasing thousands away from the factory radio-phonograph towards a hi-fi system.

If this were not true, we would not be seeing new hi-fi shops springing up all over the country to meet the great demand for better sound reproduction. You yourself need not take for granted either my arguments or my opponent's. Test them in one of the new music shops. Take any good record with which you are familiar or let the music shop choose one for you. Listen to how it sounds on a factory-made phonograph and then on a comparatively (or lower) priced hi-fi set. My case for the latter rests right there with your listening enjoyment.

Besides offering far better sound for far less money, the hi-fi system will give you more flexibility, greater convenience, all the advantages of a custom installation and the possibility of improving your system with ease and economy.

On flexibility: You can put together exactly what you prefer in the way of musical reproduction. (People vary on the particular sound they like to listen to—some want it brilliant, others warmer, etc. The controls on a hi-fi set, of course, make a wide range possible.) Each part is highly interchangeable. (In a mass-produced set, this is not true. If something major goes wrong, either you repair it expensively or replace it entirely. In the hi-fi set, you merely replace the part you no longer want.) Lastly, you can add to your set a TV screen, more speakers for other rooms or for outdoors, a monitor for the nursery or front door, and so on.

On convenience: As I mentioned, there is a certain convenience in buying a radio-phonograph all in one package, in its own cabinet. However, there are greater disadvantages: (1) The cabinet may not please you or be in keeping with your furniture. (Have you seen any good modern design in these cabinets yet?) (2) Having the speaker in the same cabinet as the record player is almost always bad: The vibration jars the tone arm and blurs the sound. (3) You must place the whole bulky instrument somewhere in the room and it seems invariably to be out of place. With the components of the hi-fi set, on the other hand, these problems are avoided. You house the amplifier out of the way in some cabinet or you simply put it on a shelf in its own handsome case. The record player is placed where you can get at it most easily. Again, it could be on an open shelf in its own container or behind cabinet doors. The radio is equally flexible. As for the controls, you can have them at the side of your easy chair. The speaker—and here's one of the virtues of the hi-fi set—is placed where it is most efficient for the entire room (in the corner, on a far wall, or wherever a music shop advisor might recommend.) It will not be so near the player as to affect the tone arm.

On custom installation: If you are building a new home or in any way remodeling one of the living areas, unquestionably the best thing to do is to build in your components so they are part of the overall architecture. But even if you are not planning such major action, the great flexibility, convenience and adaptability of components make them preferable to a factory phonograph. The speaker might go into a closet space or a corner enclosure; all the other components can be housed in almost an infinite number of ways around the room in specially made solutions or in adapted cabinets and other furniture pieces. The point is: You are free to do what you wish for better listening.

On the possibility of improving your system: Room for growth and improvement may be the greatest of all the virtues of the hi-fi sound system. You may buy an expensive and excellent amplifier when you first acquire a hi-fi set and content yourself with a good but not the best speaker or record player. Well, in time you can replace the less desirable speaker with a far better one; the same is true for the record player. Moreover, your protection against obsolescence is far greater than with the mass-produced set, because you can replace each outmoded component with a new, improved one, without simply junking your entire set, as you must do with a factory-assembled radio-phonograph when any major part becomes antiquated or less than satisfactory. Besides, nothing is simpler these days than replacing one record player with another, or one radio tuner with another in the modern hi-fi set. Instructions are few and easy to follow. (So are the controls, despite the cartoons or jokes to the contrary. They are no more difficult to learn and master than the controls on an electric frying pan.)

You owe it to your family and yourself to hear a modern hi-fi system at your local hi-fi dealer. He's a specialist with a thorough understanding of his products. Like the manufacturers who make hi-fi components, his most important asset is the integrity of the service he can perform for you.

Of one thing I'm sure: He'll open for your family a new world of musical enjoyment!

(EDITOR'S NOTE: You have heard the arguments. Now you should listen to the instruments themselves and test them to your own satisfaction. One of the best test records is Westminster's "Check and Double Check.")

Twenty-five per cent of those attending were boys from four to ten. Teachers report that the boys were among their best cooks.

There is fun for all in sharing all the activities concerned with running a household and caring for a family. An interest in cooking, properly nurtured, will grow and expand with the years. Today's homemaking toys, of which there is an enormous array, have been designed with all of these things in mind.

TIMELY TIPS FOR GARDENERS

SKETCHES BY JOHN BRIMER

Bring indoors rich, sifted soil for your winter window garden. Heavy gauge plastic laundry bags are excellent for keeping small amounts of soil in moist, ready-to-use condition. To facilitate handling, place sack in carton, creak or other container before filling, close top snugly with "Twist-ems."

Help plants weakened by drought or winds to regain strength by continuing to water them. Trees and evergreens, particularly, will respond, their roots keeping active until soil freezes. To get water into soil where needed, lay hose on ground. Force-breaker attachment slows stream, spreads water.

Clean, repair and sharpen all tools before putting them away for winter. Remove any rust with file, steel wool or rust remover, then spread a thin coat of an anti-rust preparation on all metal parts. Store in dry place.

Winterize power mower by removing dirt and grass from flywheel and cylinder head fins. Replace gasoline and oil with fresh, winter-grade gasoline and oil (4-cycle engine) or gasoline-oil mixture (2-cycle engine). Fill to top of tank. Ground sparkplug wire, then turn engine over by hand to distribute oil over metal surfaces.
